THE SICK HORSE WON.

A Long-Haired Nebraskan's Instructive Experience with Two Strangers.

"Say," said a long-haired man wearing one boot and one shoe as he approached the wagon while we were camped on the edge of Sidney, Neb., "you fellers ain't got no runnin' stock with you, I reckon?"

"No."

"I 'lowed they didn't look that way. But, then, you can't tell nothin' by looks. Hosses," and here he made a long pause and appeared to be counting the spokes in the wheel; "hosses is peculiar critters."

"How's that?"

"W'y, 'bout a month ago just such a lookin' crowd as you be come along with a couple of old hosses an' a covered wagon. You know, Bill Simmons has got a runnin' hoss. Well, Bill happened to mosey 'round where they was camped, an' he looks at their poorest hoss an' kinder grins inwardly an' keeps down a laugh by tryin' mighty hard, an' says he: 'Stranger, that air hoss o' your'n looks 's if he might have some speed in him?' 'Ya-es,' says the man, sorter sleepy and careless like; 'he runs some.' 'Y' ever put him on the track?' asks Bill. 'Sometimes, though he's gettin' pretty old,' says the man. 'Would you mind havin' a little race with an old horse o' mine?' goes on Bill. 'I'm 'greeable,' says the man. So they went over to the track, an' all the rest of us went 'long, o' course. Bill's hoss come on so he couldn't hardly hold him, head up an' mouth open. The strange hoss looked kinder sneakin' an' stood 'round with one for'ard leg bent an' its head down eatin' grass. I knowed Bill's hoss was goin' to beat, an' most ev'rybody else did. We bet all we could, though there wa'n't nobody to bet with 'cept the stranger's partner, an' he didn't seem overly 'n' above anxious, though he did take a few bets an' kinder 'pologized by sayin' their old hoss could run once, though it was hard to tell what he would do that day. I'm darned if he wasn't right, too."

"How was he right?"

"W'y, it was hard to tell what he would do that day. Old Captain Bingsley started 'em, an' Bill's hoss led right off. The stranger pounded 'way on the ribs o' his'n, but he couldn't git no motion onto him. Bill came in 'way ahead, an' I'm a liar if we didn't see the strange hoss nippin' at the grass 'long the track as he come down the home-stretch.

"Well, the stranger looked gloomy, an' set on his hoss an' let him eat 'tween the heats—it 'as to be the best two in three. But his partner, who was doing the bettin', acted a sight diff rent. He got hoppin' mad, an' said he'd bet anyhow if he did lose. We heered the man what rode the hoss tellin' him not to do it, cos' Bill's hoss were better than they thought, but he said he didn't give a durn, he'd bet anyhow. So we all bet with him, givin' him big odds, so his money would go furder an' we all could have a whack at it. But he 'peared to have an uncommon pile of it, an' kep' pullin' it out an' takin' ev'ry bet offered. I'll be snaked if he didn't have more'n the whole crowd. After awhile they got ready to start again. The stranger hadn't been off his hoss at all, but had set there chewin' terbacker an' lookin' sick. I got ten dollars more to bet on our hoss,' says the man, but nobody had another cent. Jes' then they started; same old story—Bill's hoss takin' long jumps an' the other kinder bobbin' up'n' down an' actin's if it hurt him. 'I'll bet you my watch agin yer ten dollars,' says I. 'Shove her up,' says he. I turned round an' done so an' looked back jes' in time to see the stranger kinder lean over and whoop at his hoss 'bout the time they was half way 'round the track, an' I'll be gol durned if I ever seed any thing like it in my born days. Run! Great jumpin' Jupiter! Run ain't no name for it. That hoss jes' humped down his back and reached out an' doubled up, an' reached out an' doubled up! Bill said afterwards that he didn't know nothin' 'bout when he passed him an' s'posed all the time he was ahead till he met the other comin' back jes' 'fore he went under the wire! Fact, I tell you! They rested awhile an' then run the other heat. This time the strange hoss jes' went off in what 'peared to be an easy gallop, an' kep' 'bout a rod ahead o' Bill all the way, throwin' dust in his face an' 'casionally kickin' back at him kinder funny like. But, you bet, we didn't see nothin' funny 'bout it. We was the sickest crowd you ever seen. Ev'ry cent gone an' a circus comin' in 'bout a week! An' one of 'em had my watch swellin' 'round with it stickin' in his boot-leg! Sick! Well, stranger, we was too sick to stick out our tongues! Them fellers hooked right up an' pulled out o' town with that cussed runnin' hoss droopin' down his head an' nippin' at the fire-weed 'long the side o' the road. They didn't git none too soon, neither; we was jes' goin' over to lynch 'em. That's why I came over to ask you fellers 'bout this bus'ness. The boys said they would git the rope ready while I came over, an' if you said you had a hoss that wa'n't no runner, but still you would run it, w'y we 'lowed we'd string you up over on that big tree with the crooked limb. It 'pears that the best time fer such kind o' exercises is 'fore the race an' not a'er you go 'way with your wagon-box stuffed out with our money till it's like to split.—F. H. Carruth, in Chicago Journal.

FOREIGN GOSSIP.

—Before the century is out it is estimated that London will have a population of 7,000,000.

—The Celtic language is spoken by nearly 940,000 people in Ireland, 64,000 of whom can speak no other.

—In the agricultural districts around the city of Zacatecas a laborer gets 37½ cents daily. The hours of labor are from sunrise to sunset.

—Chili is likely to prove an important source of borax. Analyses made by Chilian and English chemists indicate that the crude borax of that country can probably be made to yield as good a product as the borax of California.—N. Y. Ledger.

—The extraordinary supply of grouse in London on the first day the shooting law was up is now accounted for by the information that the grouse had been kept for ten months in ice cellars at a temperature of 28 deg. They were very much relished.

—The recent discovery of several valuable springs of different mineral waters in Costa Rica has caused the government to issue a decree declaring all such to be the property of the State, and ordering that in future none shall be transferred to private ownership.

—Young men clad in the garments formerly worn by students have been numerous in the streets of Osaka, Japan, lately. They lecture in out-of-the-way corners, and even in crowded streets when no constables are at hand, upon political subjects, and frequently urge the doctrine that "official salaries are the life-blood of the people."

—An old Prussian law provides for the annual distribution of prizes amounting to fifteen and twenty marks to such physicians and sanitary officials as shall have attempted, whether successfully or not, the resuscitation of apparently dead persons. In the last four years eighty-five such prizes were awarded, the number of those cases in which the attempted resuscitation was successful being twenty-six.

—The desert of Sahara is slowly becoming inhabitable with the aid of science. The lower Sahara is an immense basin of artesian waters, and the French are forming fresh oases with skill and success, so that the number of cultivated tracts is increasing rapidly. After a period of thirty years, forty-three oases have 13,000 inhabitants, 120,000 trees between one and seven years old, and 100,000 fruit trees.

—The Prussian army list for 1887 contains 2 field marshals, the Crown Prince and Count Moltke; 59 cavalry and infantry generals, 76 lieutenant-generals and 117 major-generals. The cavalry staff consists of 55 colonels, 38 lieutenant-colonels and 206 majors, and in the infantry staff there are 161 colonels, 172 lieutenant-colonels and 700 majors. The number of officers shows an increase of 66 as compared with last year.

—A quaint old bridge has been found in the River Glen at Spalding, Lincolnshire, where the river bed was being deepened for the construction of a new bridge. Local tradition declared that a bridge had existed there many years back, and had been washed away by a storm, and now the lost structure itself has been unearthed five feet below the bed of the stream. It was chiefly constructed of carved stones from the Spalding Monastery, pulled down in 1537, and numbers of carved coffin-lids and other relics were lying close by.

VERY GREAT CITIES.

Those Whose Population Is Placed at One Million and Upward.

Cities with 1,000,000 inhabitants and upward have never been plentiful in any age of the world, and their number is very limited now. There are four such cities in Europe, three or four in Asia, and but one on this continent. The doubt in regard to the number in Asia arises from the fact that it is difficult to determine whether the claim of Nanking to 1,000,000 inhabitants is correct or not. Assuming it, however, to be just, the rank of the very great cities of the world, based on the censuses of 1880 and 1881, would stand as follows: London, 4,766,561; Paris, 2,269,023; Canton, 1,600,000; New York, 1,206,590; Tokio, 1,140,586; Berlin, 1,122,360; Vienna, 1,103,857; Peking, 1,000,000; Nanking, 1,000,000. The round numbers given as representing the population of the three Chinese cities named have a very suspicious look, and perhaps they ought to be thrown out of the account entirely. Certainly, Chinese or Japanese estimates or partial enumerations are not to be placed beside a properly taken census. A singular illustration of the folly of estimates was furnished by the case of Tokio, which was once believed to be the most populous city in the world, and to have 4,000,000 inhabitats. When a census came to be taken the population of the city was found to be as stated above, and this number includes the suburbs. The population of the city proper was but 811,510. In the figures given for Vienna, the suburbs are also included. As London is not a city, in the proper sense of the term, but an aggregation of municipalities, the population given is that of the metropolitan and city police districts which cover a very large area, about 26 square miles. A similar area about New York would take in all Kings County, half of Queens, Westcher and Richmond Counties, as well as Jersy City, Newark, and numerous small towns in New Jersey, with an aggregate population at the last census of at least 2,250,000, and, of course, a much larger population now.—Epoch.

DUTIES OF GUESTS.

How Lady Visitors Can Make Themselves Agreeable to Their Hostesses.

Much has been written about the art of entertaining and the duties of a hostess, but is there no obligation on the other side? To be a really acceptable guest requires infinite tact, or else possession of most of the cardinal virtues. How many a guest has gone home a little less liked by the hostess! A little care and thoughtfulness will make "visiting" a less trying ordeal. In the first place, it is better to understay rather than overstay an invitation, and is pleasanter for both parties if the length of the visit desired is stated before hand by the hostess. Perhaps the most consideration of all is that the family routine should be disturbed as little as possible. Be up in time for breakfast and prompt at all meals. Do not ask for tea or milk at odd times, or order what is not on the table. Remember you are not at a hotel. I once saw a lady guest call for olives when they were not on the bill of fare, and the hostess has never forgotten this particular act of rudeness. Make as little trouble as possible.

If there is only one overworked servant, why not make your own bed? Have some employment of your own as an excuse for retiring to your own room for some time each day. Do not follow your hostess about all the time, as she generally has many duties, and especially respect private rooms, unless particularly invited to them. Do not give your washing to the house servant. Pay for your own luggage in coming and going, if a public conveyance is employed, and do not sponge upon your hostess for car fare and trivial expenses. These little things make many a friendship less warm. You certainly would not take one of your friends with you unless particularly invited to do so by the hostess. Do not demand too much attention. Be easily pleased, and chime in most cordially with any thing proposed. Try to please the tastes of your hostess in every way. Consult their likes and dislikes even in manners of dress; be interested in what interests them; be sure not to hurt their feelings. Do not criticise the family you visit; admire what is good; do not notice the rest. Do not always tell of the fine things you have seen or eaten elsewhere. Help your hostess; amuse a child or entertain other guests. Show your love for your hostess in all little ways. Give the servant who waits upon you some money. It makes it easier for the mistress if the servants do "not object to company." Try to make some return for your visits—either an invitation, a timely gift, or at least honestly expressed gratitude or appreciation. Lastly, study some one who is an ever-welcome guest and try to grasp her secret.—A. M. Turner.

BROTHERLESS GIRLS.

Why They Are Usually the Victims of Sundry Affectations.

A brotherless girl may have a languid air, a simpering expression and the habit of using long words where short ones would be better, but any one who can boast of from two to eight brothers is sure to have her little affectations well weeded out. The girl whose brother is one of her best friends will not make eyes, nor drawl, nor give her photograph to an acquaintance of yesterday, nor answer advertisements whose object is "mutual improvement." She will understand that there are some sorts of innocent sounding slang that ought never to be used, and she will remember that the women who wish to retain the reverence of men should decide how little slang they can possibly get along with and not use a quarter of that. She will learn that men, good and bad alike, treat a silly woman civilly to her face and pronounce her an awful goose behind her back; that nobody has a profound regard for awful geese except the men who marry them, and that even they—well, we will not go further into the subject, but any rate they find out a great deal of which the brotherless girl knows nothing at all.

A great deal is written about selfish and depraved boys who are ruined for life by the injudicious fondling received from their mothers and sisters, and it may be that, to a youth of naturally evil tendencies, petting and adulation are almost as bad as anubbing and scolding; but even a bad boy has a strong sense of justice, a love of fair play and a willingness to stand up for those who stand up for him. Any girl who really interests herself in her ten, or twelve, or fourteen-year-old brother, who acquaints herself with his ideas, furthers his plans, shows that she takes a genuine pleasure in his society, will find not only that her influence over him is daily increasing, but also that his wholesome, practical and sensible way of looking at things is a decided benefit to her.—Toronto Globe.

Railroading in Costa Rica.

On every train of three cars, one for baggage and two for passengers, are thirteen men. First a manager or conductor, who has general supervision, a locomotive engineer and stoker, two ticket takers, two brakemen for each car, and two men to handle baggage and express packages—all of them being arrayed in the most resplendent uniforms, the conducter having the appearance of a Major-General on dress parade. Freight trains are run upon the same system and at a similar expense. Shippers are allowed thirty and sixty days after the goods are delivered to pay their freight charges, and passengers who are known to the station agents can get tickets on credit and have the bill sent to them on their return.—Harper's Magazine.

THINK FOR YOURSELF.

How Young Men Can Achieve Success in Their Chosen Calling.

Earnest, independent thought on the part of any boy or young man who has set out to make a mechanic of himself will certainly bring him both knowledge and skill in his chosen calling.

We hear or see statements every little while that as machine shops gradually grow into manufacturing concerns the work is systematized until there is nothing but routine in the different classes of work, and a boy apprenticed to one of these establishments "gets no show" in the shop, and is "no good" when his time is out.

That a graduate from, say, a steam pump shop, going to any other shop doing a different class of work, must work for small wages, in order to "hold a job," because he can not take hold of work as it comes along and do it intelligently. He is pictured as being sent out of the shop to make repairs upon a steam engine, or line up a shaft in a brewery, or to fix an hydraulic elevator that is on a strike.

After wasting an hour or two of time, he admits that he is "stuck," and goes crestfallen back to the shop, taking this message to the foreman: "Send up a machinist next time." And then the parties get their work done at some other shop, and refuse to pay for what our pump man has done, because he did not know what he was about. He actually caused damage by his ignorance. Why is this? He might have been a good man in a pump shop, but fails immediately on attempting printing press or sewing machine work. He has learned to turn and bore, to plane and slot, to chip, file and scrape, but he fails when asked to perform any of these operations on any thing except a steam pump. Is it because he has not learned to do these things well, or because he did not use his brains while learning to use his hands?

Machine shops are always overrun with applicants for apprenticeship. But nine-tenths of the applicants for places never think of any thing beyond getting into the shop. Of their own fitness for the machinists' trade they never inquire into. They expect to work three years for a little less pay than they could get shoveling, and then blossom at once into a first-class, well-paid machinist, with no particular mental effort on their part. The result is easy to see. We see it every day in the army of workmen who can do only the commonest work, and oftentimes in only a single branch of the trade of which they call themselves masters.

This, I claim, is from want of thought on the part of the boy or man himself. The steam-pump man, if he has mastered the trade as far as taught in the steam-pump shop, has mastered the principles upon which the steam-pump operates, and is a competent man to send out to repair a gas engine or a printing press. But this he can not do without thought, and thought is but another name for study. The study that it takes to master the principles of the steam-pump will incidentally bring knowledge of other machinery that can not fail to be of use some time.

A boy once taught the habit of individual thinking about his work, a place in the front rank of mechanics is sure to be his. Thought will give him confidence and skill, and with these two elements in his mechanical make-up he will prove a valuable man anywhere he is employed, whether they build saw-mill machinery or machine tools to build saw-mill machinery with.—American Machinist.

MEN OF GENIUS.

They, Too, Long for What Is Far Beyond Their Reach.

So far from being narrow the man of genius must, one should say, be broad in the range of his conception, and if not in that, of his execution. There is a sense, indeed, in which every artist would be the gainer by becoming universal. Thus the poet and the painter may each profit from a full and exact study of the facts of natural science. But then the artistic benefit depends on the subject being studied not as a savant would study it, merely for the precise knowledge, but for the sake of the poetical or pictorial aspects, relations and suggestions which the facts present.

So true is this that one is hardly going too far in laying it down as a canon that a painter ought to be a good reasoner on the causes of natural phenomena, and that a painter ought not to be an authority in the realm, say, of purely historical and ethical discussion. The lives of great men have often shown us a strange and perverse inclination to break through the bounds of their proper domain. More than one man of undoubted genius has, it is averred, expressed regret that he had not attained distinction in some other line than his own. Wolfe, when actually engaged in his last crowning feat of generalship, said that he would rather have written Gray's "Elegy."

Goethe, not satisfied to be the greatest of poets, was ambitious to become a savant as well. Such facts appear at first sight to contradict our theory that superlative performance of any kind implies a corresponding concentration of impulse. Yet the contradiction is only apparent. We may be sure that Wolfe—who, by the by, became a soldier soon after he was thirteen—was, on the whole, more passionately desirous of military than of poetic distinction, just as we know that in Goethe the poetic impulse was the most potent and permanent. Such occasional roving ambitions may mean nothing more than that the great man, like the small one, is apt to overestimate what lies beyond his reach, or perhaps that he, more than common men, is aware of the limitations that hem him in, and is now and again disposed to rebel against them.—Gentleman's Magazine.

OIL OF PEPPERMINT.

Where It Is Grown, Also Distilled and Whither Shipped.

"The speculators are at work again," said a wholesale druggist when shown a dispatch from Lyons, N. Y., stating that there are over 200,000 pounds of peppermint oil in Wayne County, and in consequence the price is lower than at any time in the past thirty years.

"Peppermint is a small crop compared with wheat or corn," he continued, "and it is grown on a small territory, Wayne County, in this State, producing nearly all the peppermint oil that is used in the world. These facts make it a tempting field for speculation."

"How do the speculators operate?"

"They begin just as that dispatch indicates; first, by saying that there is a large quantity of oil held over from last year, which is not true; then they overstate the amount on hand, and finally they clinch the matter by saying that only $1.80 a pound is offered. That price may be offered, but the farmers who produce the oil are too sharp to sell at less than $2.50 a pound, and they will hold it and beat the speculators at their own game."

"Why is not more of it raised?"

"The mint requires peculiar soil and special care is needed both in the raising of the plant and the distilling of the oil. The crop is grown on land that is moist and has a rich, sandy loam. The mint is planted in furrows thirty inches apart, and while growing requires a great deal of cultivation, as every weed has to be kept out. Otherwise the oil would not be good. When full grown and in bloom it is cut with a scythe and hauled to the still as soon as it is wilted.

Large steam tubs with tightly-fitting covers are used to hold the mint, which is tramped down thoroughly. The steam is turned on at the bottom, and, passing upward through the mass of mint, vaporizes the oil and carries it out through a pipe at the top. This pipe carries the steam and oil into a spiral worm or cooler surrounded by cold water. Here the steam is condensed into water and the oil settles on top of it. Both now pass to a receiving tank, which has an overflow pipe running from the bottom up nearly to a level with the top. The object of this is to draw off the water from the bottom and leave the oil to be dipped from the top. The oil is as clear in color as the best kerosene. It is packed in tin cans for shipment, and is sent all over the United States, and considerable of it goes abroad."

"Is there none raised in Europe?"

"Yes, Germany produces a little, but we send more to Germany than Germany raises, and we furnish not only England and France, but Russia and Austria as well. The greatest use for it is in confectionery. Peppermint lozenges are eaten from one end of the globe to the other, and you can form some idea of the quantity of them made from the fact that $150,000 worth of oil is used every year to flavor them.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

A TIMELY PROTEST.

How Housekeepers Are Victimized by a Certain Class of Peddlers.

There is a form of advertising which appears to me a direct imposition on housekeepers, and I only wonder that they have not ere this risen as one woman to protest against it. It is the practice which some manufacturers of new articles of housekeeping supplies have of leaving samples—more or less in number or quantity—of their wares, together with a printed circular in which, included in other details, is an inconspicuous paragraph asking that the article be used, and the quantity consumed paid for when, at the end of an unspecified time, the agent shall call for the remainder of the goods. The annoyance inflicted on a housekeeper by this mode of introducing goods is obvious. The door bell rings. The servant answering it has handed to her an unwrapped package of kitchen soap or starch, or scouring sand or stove blacking. There is, to be sure, a loose printed slip eulogizing the merits of the article, and in inconspicuous type a few words explaining that the article will be called for, and payment expected for quantity used, but even if she can read English she is not going to waste her time over an advertisement. She glances at it on her way back to the kitchen, tosses the soap, or whatever the goods are, on the table—to be used when the supply on hand is found to be out, and the circular goes into the coal scuttle. Ten days or a fortnight after the agent calls. A new girl opens the door. The lady of the house hears the prolonged dialogue. Being appealed to by the persistent agent and the bewildered girl, she directs a search to be made for the silver polish, or patent starch, or laundry soap. Of course the search is vain. The departed servant either used, lost or stole the articles. The agent insists on payment, and finally to terminate a scene the housekeeper draws out her purse, and depletes it to any amount, varying from ten cents to one dollar. Sometimes, when the article to be advertised is of a suitable bulk, such as books of needles, or papers of pins, the samples are chucked into the letter-box and even under the front door. Now, no business man would tolerate having half a dozen penknives, or patent pen-holders, or improved pocket pencils left without his knowledge on his desk, or in his office for him to give houseroom to for days or weeks, and then be responsible for them or their pecuniary equivalent at the end of that time. Why then should women be compelled to endure such impositions?—Chicago Journal.

MR. SMATHERS DRIVES A TACK.

And the Crystallization Process Sets in Rapidly.

THE happiness of a Harlem household has recently been destroyed by a most unfortunate occurrence, and the white winged dove of peace has folded her wings like a cabinet bedstead and vanished.

Mr. Baldwin Smathers resides in One Hundred and Twenty-fourth street, and the connubial bliss of the Smathers family has been undisturbed until last Friday afternoon. Mrs. Smathers has long been noted among the neighbors for an astonishing talent in making preserves. Indeed, the fame of her pickled peaches, raspberry jam and canned pears reached at least three blocks each way. Every season she puts up a generous supply of fruits, and to be presented with a jar of Mrs. Smathers' preserves was a mark of extraordinary esteem.

Last week the canning season was formally concluded with quinces, and the family moved to an apartment house just around the block. The sixty-nine jars of preserves received especial care in transportation and were carefully stowed away upon the top shelf of the pantry. On returning from business Mr. Smathers found his wife endeavoring to drive a nail into the wall above the preserve shelf to hang up some herbs. She had placed a stool on a chair, and perched on this combination was struggling with the hammer and nail. Her husband watched the combat in patronizing silence and then said: "I never saw a woman yet who could drive a nail. Get down off that chair, Martha, and let me drive your tacks."

Mrs. Smathers climbed down, and grasping the hammer, her husband was soon in position on the stool. He accomplished, however, considerably more than he intended. Giving the half driven nail a vicious dig to pull it out and begin over again, he loosened a cleat that supported the shelf, and the results were appalling. There was a frightful crash that resounded from cellar to roof, and Mr. Smathers, the chair and the stool disappeared from view. The air was filled with broken glass, flying peaches, pears and plums, and canned cherries pattered about on the floor like big red hailstones.

On Mrs. Smathers' upturned countenance the contents of a jar of strawberries settled gently down. Two damsons and a label decorated her back hair, and on every part of her dress that offered any inducement there nestled jellies and jams, quinces and plums and blackberries in artless confusion.

Dazed by the sudden crash she stood for a moment or two mechanically endeavoring to remove the strawberry juice from her countenance with a small pocket handkerchief. Just then there was a struggle amid the glass and debris in the corner, and Mr. Smathers came slowly to his feet, still grasping the hammer. He was a most astonishing sight. There was enough broken glass on his person to have horrified the boldest cat on the Smathers back fence. His mustache was strewn with pineapple marmalade, and a stream of red juice and another of white united on his back and fell in a syrupy cascade from his coat tails. A quince did duty for a scarf pin, and the Smathers hair was occupied by two brandied peaches and a pint of juice, which gave him an anti-prohibition odor for three days.

"You horrible, horrible brute," said Mrs. Smathers, choking her anger, as she extracted two more strawberries from her hair. "Just see what you have done," she added hysterically.

Her husband seemed somewhat in doubt just what to do in his tutti frutti condition. "I would rather not discuss this matter just now, Martha," he said timidly, as he removed some apple jelly from his left eye with his coat sleeve. "The back of my head is crystallizing, and unless I am wiped off soon I shall be a marroon glace in ten minutes."—New York Tribune.

Curiosities of Law.

Judge—Stand up.

Prisoner—I claim the right under the law to remain seated, y'r honor.

"How so?"

"The law says no man can be made to criminate himself, an' if I stand up I'll criminate myself."

"That point is well taken and you may remain seated. You are accused of stealing a pair of breeches from this man, but I can find no evidence against you."

"None at all, y'r honor."

"You are discharged."

"Thank you, y'r honor."

"By the way, why were you unwilling to stand up?"

"If I stood up the man would see I had his breeches on, y'r honor."—Omaha World.

Health Resorts.

First Doctor—Busy?

Second Doctor—Yes, almost worked to death.

"So am I. It will be two months before the people returning from their health getting trips will quit sending for the doctors."

"That's a fact. If it wasn't for these health resorts we would have to go out of business."—Texas Siftings.

A Little Superstitious.

Wife (to husband)—There were two hats that I liked, one for $13 and one for $18.

Husband—Which did you finally decide upon?

Wife—The $18 one. I'm a little superstitious about the number thirteen.—New York Sun.

To Him That Hath.

"Is it true, old man, that you are going to marry Miss B—— and her two millions?"

"Yes; to-morrow."

"Ah! Here is the $5 I owe you."—Town Topics.

THE FUNNY PROFESSOR.

Comments of the Intelligent Compositors Who Set Up His Copy.

Prof. Remington, of the Calacanthus Academy, the author of many of the amusing articles which have recently appeared in the Daily Horn, called on the editor of that journal several evenings ago, and, after much "tittering," said:

"If, sir, the articles which I have been sending to your influential journal were humorous, I have now prepared one for you that is unreservedly funny—so funny, indeed, that even I, after conceiving it, and thereby being prepared for all surprises, can not read it over without extreme laughter. I should think that when an author laughs at his own conceits it is the best test of their mirth-provoking qualities. Artemas Ward, you know, often laughed uproariously at some of his jokes, and what better bears out the truth of my observation, the jokes that most excited his laughter had the most effect upon his readers."

The editor, who was running a six-line advertisement for Calacanthus Academy, agreed with the professor.

"I am told," said the school man, "that printers are fair judges of humor."

"Yes," replied the editor.

"Well, then, sir, when they strike this article a wave of mirth will ride throughout your entire office. By the way, I would like to take an unobserved position and hear their comment."

The editor consented, and the professor secreted himself behind a pile of paper. He had to smother his mirth when he recalled certain expressions in the article, and once, had it not been for the timely and vigorous use of his handkerchief, he would, with a snort, have betrayed his hiding-place.

First Compositor (with a groan)—I've gone into the floral business.

Second Compositor—How so?

First Compositor—Caught some slush from Calacanthus.

Third Compositor (with a groan)—Is that chump writing again?

First Compositor—Yes; and he's extra funny this time.

Second Compositor—He's calculated to make a man tired.

First Compositor—Yes, and yet some people wonder why printers drink.

Third Compositor—The real wonder is that they don't commit suicide.

Fourth Compositor—Hello, I've got a take of it. Wish I had that fellow.

First Compositor—What would you do with him?

Fourth Compositor—Teach him to stand on his hind legs.

Third Compositor—He's getting funnier. Says here that a widow is a widow because her husband won't live wid 'er.

Loud groans.

First Compositor—Hold on; here's a master stroke. Say that the yellow negro ought to have more affection for the mule than the black negro has, because the yellow fellow is a mule-atto.

More groans.

The printers loudly thumped their their cases.

Third Compositor—Wonder if the law would do any thing with a man for killing him?

Fourth Compositor—Not if the jury had any sense.

Second Compositor—That settles it. If that fellow comes around here I will bathe my hands in his cold and watery blood.

The professor slipped away. As he passed through the editorial room the editor innocently asked:

"Professor, won't you stay and look over your proof?"

"No, I thank you. In fact, I don't feel very well this evening."—Tid-Bits.

Two Expensive Legs.

De Smith—Did you ever hear of a man having a pair of legs worth $40,000 apiece?

McGinnis—I never did.

"Well, a man in Chicago named Pete Jenkins has got legs quoted at that figure."

"Nonsense; nobody ever had legs quoted at $40,000 apiece."

"Well, read the paper for yourself."

McGinnis took the paper and read: "The furniture warehouse of Wilson & Jones was burned to the ground last night. An iron safe was overturned on the porter, breaking his legs. Loss, $80,000."—Texas Siftings.

Too Much Indignation.

"Miss Bell," said Gus DeJay, "if you persist in refusing me in this mannah, I am suah something dweadful will come of it. I cawn't endure it, you know."

"Indeed?"

"Ya-as. I shouldn't be at all surpwised if it comes to make me lose my min' or something of that soht, you know."

"Come, Mr. DeJay, please confine yourself to the discussion of possibilities."—Merchant Traveler.

—The Calcutta Englishman calls attention to a remarkable decline in the popularity of the great Rath Jattra or Car Festival, at the Juggernaut Temple in Orissa. The religious enthusiasm of the crowd is said to be also disappearing. There is no longer a wild rush for the car, in which the idol is dragged from the temple to a country house and back again, and on several occasions it has been necessary to hire coolies to perform the work.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7.....1888

The Secretary of the Navy in his Annual report to the President, says: "In like manner contracts for armor and gun steel are made at prices within 25 per cent. of the European price for the similar article, not greater than the difference in labor between the two countries, notwithstanding the heavy outlay for plant (estimated at $2,500,000) necessary to undertake the contract." The administration is strongly opposed to a protective tariff, yet here is a member of the cabinet who admits that under the tariff the wages paid to American workmen is at least 25 per cent greater than the wages paid to European workmen engaged in the same kind of work. Surely this is protection for workman as well as for the employer.

Congressman Herman, of Oregon, has prepared and will introduce a bill which will be a great benefit to the Pacific Coast, and to settlers upon public lands everywhere; it is to permit a second homestead entry to be made under certain restrictions on the public domain. It has often happened that when a man has taken up a homestead entry in good faith he has, by accident or misfortune, been unable to comply with the requirements of the law. Herman's bill will give bonafide settlers another chance to obtain a homestead, but will debar speculators from any such opportunity. Mr. Herman will introduce a bill to fix the compensation of registers and receivers of Land Offices and regulate the fees thereof. It proposes to fix a sliding scale of fees in proportion to the business of the different offices, somewhat on the basis that the emoluments of the first, second, third and fourth class postmasters are determined.

The following is part of a speech delivered in the United States Senate by Senator Stewart, of Nevada.

"While the bondholder has grown rich by this war on silver, how has the farmer fared? Wheat, for example is cheaper to-day than it has been for one hundred years. The farmer of the United States is forced to sell his wheat on a gold basis. He is suffering the full force of the demonetization of silver and the destruction of one half of the world's money. The gold coin in circulation to-day does not exceed the gold and silver coin in circulation forty years ago, while the population of Europe and America has about doubled in that time. This is not all. The fact that silver is over twenty five per cent. discount in the United States is developing the productive industries of India, where the silver remains at par with gold. The speculator buys silver in America at a discount of 25 per cent. and exchanges it in India for wheat and cotton at par. He has 25 per cent. advantage in the London market over the importer of wheat from America, who buys for gold. In 1879, before cheap silver had stimulated the production of wheat in India, the United States shipped to Europe over 150,000,000 bushels of wheat and sold it for over $190,000000. In the same year India only exported 4,000,000 bushels. In 1886 the United States shipped less than 58,000,000 bushels of wheat to Europe and received for it less than $50,000,000, while in the same year India's shipment rose from 4,000,000 in 1879 to 39,000,000 bushels in 1887. There has been no over production of wheat to reduce the price. There has been no increase in the last ten years except in India; on the contrary there has been a decline in quantity throughout Europe and America. In June, 1886, an animated discussion occurred in London, at the Colonial Chamber of Commerce. Upon the subject of the low price of silver and its effect upon the prosperity of India, Sir Robert N. Fowlor, M. P., a London banker and ex lord mayor, said that "the effect of the depreciation of silver must finally be the ruin of the wheat and cotton industries of America, and be the development of India as the chief wheat and cotton exporter of the world." Notwithstanding these plain facts, and the universal depression of the farming business of the United States, caused by the low price of products, growing out of the demonetization of silver, the bondholders still insist upon their demands.

FROM SCANDINAVIA.

STURDY PEOPLE WHO HAVE OVER RUN SEVEN WESTERN STATES.

They Make Admirable Citizens in Many Ways—The Majority Are Farmers—Churches and Newspapers—Peculiarities of Swedes and Norwegians.

Neither Jan Printz in his stronghold on the Delaware nor Jan Claudius Risingh the commander of Fort Casimir, had such strong reasons for calling their settlements New Sweden as the people of many a town in Minnesota have. The immigration to the northwest from Scandinavia has been enormous. Beginning a few years before the war of the rebellion, when Minnesota was the main hunting ground of the Sioux Indians, it continued small and irregular until 1866, when it began in a mighty volume, and since that time it has continued without serious interruption until now there are in this country more than 400,000 Swedes and Norwegians, the great majority of them being residents of Minnesota, Dakota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois, Nebraska and Kansas. For forty years previous to the war they came at the rate of from 100 to 2,000 a year. Since the rebellion as many as 80,000 of them have arrived in one year. Illinois has 58,000 of them, mostly Swedes, one-half of the number being in Chicago. Iowa's 40,000 are about equally divided between Swedes and Norwegians. Kansas has 12,000, principally Swedes, while Nebraska has 12,000, the majority of whom are of the same nationality. In Wisconsin there are 57,000, mostly Norwegians, which is true also of Dakota's 25,000. Minnesota heads the list with about 125,000, most of whom are Norwegians.

LITERALLY TAKEN POSSESSION.

Men of middle age, who remembered that as boys the picture in their school books of "a Norwegian killing a bear" suggested a country and a race that were then as remote from us as the Soudan and the Soudanese now are, will be amazed at these figures, but they do not tell the whole truth. The Scandinavian has literally taken possession of whole counties in the northwest, and the civilization which there obtains is that of Scandinavia, with some modifications and improvements, rather than that of the United States. In Minnesota, more than in any other state, the Swedes and Norwegians have impressed themselves upon business, society and politics. At the last census the native voting population of this state was 88,000, while the foreign-born voters numbered 123,000. In only two other states does this condition of affairs prevail, viz: Nevada and Wisconsin. The foreign-born voter predominates in every congressional district in Minnesota, their smallest majority being 3,000 in the First, and the largest 13,000, in the Third.

In the first place it may be said that as a body the Scandinavians are industrious, thrifty, honest, and pious. They are more clannish than the Germans, and more docile than the Irish. The great majority of them follow agriculture, although there are many in the fisheries, not a few are (if possible) engaged as sailors on the great lakes, and several thousands of them are carpenters and masons. Of a Scandinavian family every member works. The man and wife who own and operate a farm in Minnesota, Iowa, or Wisconsin will have daughters at domestic service in some adjacent city. Thousands of the best house servants in Chicago are from the families of Scandinavian farmers in the northwest. This industry, the close economy which is usually practiced by young and old of both sexes, the absence of spreeing habits on the part of the men as a rule, the tendency of all to attach themselves to the land, save as they can better their condition in the cities, and the kindly and helpful disposition which they show toward each other, are all having the effect of making these newcomers to independence and wealth.

THEIR CHURCH ORGANIZATIONS.

They have their own churches, mostly Lutheran, although there are many of the Methodist and Baptist denominations; and fifty newspapers and periodicals, more than half of which are published in Chicago in their native tongue, supply them with suitable reading. No Scandinavian community, no matter how small, is without its church organization, and where there is not wealth enough to support a clergyman, that functionary works on week days at the plow, or at the bench the same as other people, and prepares for his Sunday labors during the evenings. Singularly undemonstrative, unobstrusive, and taciturn, the Scandinavians, notwithstanding their large numbers, are not conspicuous. Their goings and comings are all quiet; their proceedings all orderly. They do not, as a rule, figure in any organizations outside the church. In the cities they are not turbulent or excitable. If by any chance during a political campaign a few scores of them can be persuaded to march in a procession, they are as demure in their deportment as if they were in attendance at a funeral. Not given much to hilarity, indulging in it in no Sunday parades or picnics, and caring little for beer, such of them as have an appetite for intoxicants are satisfied with nothing weaker than alcoholic spirits. But the fabulous Scandinavians must be comparatively few in number or else very circumspect when under the influence of liquor, for the police records have very little to say about them.

One peculiar thing about these two kindred people from the great northern peninsula of Europe is the sublime contempt in which the Swedes profess to hold the Norwegians. Nothing hurts a Swedish young woman more than to be taken for a Norwegian, and she is not slow to rebuke the person so offending. The Swedes are generally fairer and taller than the Norwegians, who are apt to be short, stocky and swarthy, like many of the Danes. Swedish girls who have had the benefits of good home training are highly prized by American families, and they master the English language so easily that, with their fair hair and complexion, it is often difficult to recognize that they are newcomers. What is true of them is true of members of both races as regards their lingual accomplishments. A Scandinavian soon divests himself of every trace of his own accent, and speaks English as fluently as anybody with no greater advantages than he. While most members of the race in this country cherish a natural affection for the old country, their unemotional natures render them free from a desire to parade their nationalistic prejudices, and it can not be doubted that they will be assimilated, in spite of their clannishness, more rapidly than the people of some other nationalities, who bring their old-country pride and prejudices here with them and transmit them to their children.—St. Paul Cor. New York Sun.

Old World Basins and New.

The Great Basin region of America finds a parallel in the Old World in the deserts of Africa and Arabia and in the steppes of Siberia, Turkestan and Mongolia, where, about the desert of Gobi, are found the salt and alkaline lakes of Kossogal, Suyonac, Kolynan, Karagal, Kerrilbach-Noor and many others, in all respects corresponding to Great Salt, Pyramid, Mono, Owens, Walker and other lakes lying between the Sierra Nevada and the Rocky mountains, in the range of country formerly known as the "Great American Desert." Most of the lakes of Mongolia and the Kirghis steppes contain groups of pyramidal rocks from 100 to 500 feet high.—Pacific Journal.

EXPENSIVE ODDITIES

The Freaks of Fashionable Ladies as Manifested in Canine Collars—Gems of Artistic Skill—Dogs of the Various Cities—A Dog's Dress.

In 1879 there was not over $4,000 invested in the United States in dog collars, while to-day over $500,000 is annually expended in this line of canine adornment. Many a dog belonging to a Boston or New York dude or dudine possesses a collar which costs more than the entire wardrobe of many a man or woman of respectable social standing, and it is said that once a New York gentleman sent a dog collar worth $13,000 to a young lady whom he fancied rather than her dog. The collar was made of gold and ornate with diamonds, rubies and garnets. $20 is considered a not extravagant sum in these fashionable cities to be expended on their favorites, or rather $20 is quite an ordinary sum to pay for a dog collar. There is as much fashion in a dog collar as there is in the cut of a coat, for each breed of dog has a different collar to suit his particular line of beauty or the color of his hair.

GEMS OF ARTISTIC SKILL.

There are collars which are gems of artistic skill, then there are other collars which almost strike awe into the beholder from their warlike aspect; then again there are silk, velvet, satin and feather collars decorated with bells and bangles. In the cities of Philadelphia and New York the bangle collar is extremely fashionable, and it is considered quite a mark of honor for a young lady to ask her gentleman friends for their monograms or a new $5 piece to attach it to their dog's collars. Many a proud pug, when a pug was fashionable, could be seen in the cities with a $500 dog collar and about twenty $5 pieces attached to his collar. In truth, the manufacture of the dog collar has brought about the necessity of the dog. Ladies who before detested dogs have been known to purchase largely after they came under the fascinating influence of an expensive dog collar. Dog men will tell you that fashionable Boston and New York ladies generally purchase their collars first, and then have the town scoured for a dog to fit it. Men, too, who have determined to be ultra-fashionable are not unlike in this respect. The handsome dog collar brought on the dog craze.

Boston, as before remarked, is par excellence in the city for dogs, it being said that a dog of any pure breed whatever will easily bring $75 to $100, while in dog collars Boston spends $50,000. New York can not show such figures. San Francisco is now spending $10,000 in dog collars and it is estimated that within the next five years this city will more than double that amount. Philadelphia stands high in the estimation of dog men, but there the dogs patronized are of the smaller breeds. In Minneapolis the dog men find a congenial city. It is simply overran with dogs—curs and good dogs—and the peculiarity of the townspeople of Minneapolis is that they all want their dogs collared. Chicago, too, shows well, spending a great deal of money in dogs and on their collars. The people of St. Louis are loth to part with dollars for dogs and much less so for collars, while Denver, for its small size, is mentioned in terms of respectful admiration. Kansas City, Mo., is liberal in purchase, and it is expected that within a few years there will be larger purchases there than in St. Louis. The cities which spend most in dogs and dog collars are in this order: Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, San Francisco, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Hartford. But fashion springs in New York, from New York come the rules which govern the style, for New York are especially manufactured the latest novelties.

BIG DOGS ARE IN DEMAND.

In the eastern states big dogs are in demand, the western states are undecided, but take a mixture of large and small, while San Francisco is pronouncedly for the small dog. The pug has become vulgar. When the pug was a high-priced animal there was not a woman of wealth in the east of taste and position who did not have a pug. Pugs were imported wholesale. A pug was no longer a rara avis, but has gone decidedly out of fashion. From the obese and ugly, ill-proportioned pug public dog affection set itself upon the burly mastiff, the huge Newfoundland, the sagacious St. Bernard, the treacherous collie, and the ferocious bloodhound. Always high-priced, their values rose higher. Fabulous sums were given for any of these kinds. But the sun of popularity of the mastiff, the collie and the Newfoundland is already in the wane and that of the fox terrier and the St. Bernard is in the ascendant.

A fashionable dog's dress does not always solely consist of his collar, as did the Maori chiefs' full dress when invited to a British ball. There are boots for dogs who are afflicted with sore feet; there are coats for dogs, anklets for dogs, and, above all, harness for the pretty pets. The full-dress harness at first a excited little ridicule, it being made so that a number of straps should go around the dog's body, and so that when he came to a muddy crossing the lady could pick him up and carry him across the street in the same manner a man has to carry to a railway station a number of parasols loosely done up in a shawl. It soon became the rage in in New York, and the ladies declared that the boots and the full dress prevented a great deal of pneumonia. It was, after a good deal of thought, decided that dogs should not be led by collar and chain, as the sudden haul upon the dog's neck when he turned a corner against his mistress' inclination was noticed in many cases to cause a rush of blood to the dog's head; so invention was brought to bear, and after several scientific meetings on the part of the ladies the manufacturers were told to make an extension harness, so that strain should be brought upon the shoulders.—San Francisco Chronicle.

It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. ## DIED.

ALVAREZ—At Cerro Gordo, January 4, 1888, Florentino Alvarez, aged about 50 years.

Cloudy weather all the week.

Dan. Williams of Lone Pine was in town a few days this week.

Numerous railroad accidents occurred in the East during the recent snow storm.

By change of Warden at San Quentin, Captain Ed. Reddy goes out of office there.

America for American citizens and American markets for the products of American labor.

The son of Sarah Bernhardt didn't follow his mother's example. He was married lately.

The violin solo of George Wood was well received as any part of the concert; the boy plays very sweetly.

Chief Engineer Smith and party of the Salt Lake and Los Angeles road were at Daggett last week.

The down mail on Wednesday was very light. Snow delayed the trains and connection was not made at Reno.

Mr. and Mrs. Marshall came up from Keeler and spent the holidays at Independence with Mr. and Mrs. Baxter.

Hon. J. M. Dormer has bought an interest in the Reno Gazette and will take the business management of the paper.

When the husband gives too much time to poker at the saloon, the wife should do a little poker playing when he gets home.

James T. Farrell, telegraph operator at Virginia City died last Saturday of erysipelas. His former home was at Guelph, Ontario.

The snow storm up at Virginia city was unusually severe last week. The snow was thirty inches deep in the streets on Friday morning.

The overland railroads have increased the cost of tickets to California $20. They want to find the top notch that the traffic will bear.

The Frankels, stockbrokers of Virginia City, have been released from bankruptcy. The firm consists of L. B., Joseph E and Jacob Frankel.

Judging by the demand for blank location notices there must have been many mine locations made in this locality within the last few days.

Mr. Ed. Clark and his sister, Miss Louisa Clark, of Bishop Creek, have been spending a couple of week with friends at Independence and vicinity.

The Los Angeles Express says beyond a doubt Jay Gould owns Rattlesnake island, and the terminus of the Salt Lake and Los Angeles railroad will be there.

In San Francisco during the past year an abundance of money could be borrowed on real estate at six per cent. per annum, the lender paying the mortgage tax.

Mr. James McIntosh finished his holiday vacation in town and went up to Black Rock on Thursday morning. He appeared to have a pleasant time while in town.

Rubbing with tallow is said to be the best remedy known for galled shoulders of horses. The collar should be cleaned after use and plenty of tallow rubbed on the face of it.

Warrants were issued last Saturday at San Francisco for the arrest of Mayor Pond and health officer Gale for maintaining a nuisance in placing a small-pox tent on the plaza.

Senator Hearst voted against the education bill. Mr. Hearst knows it is not necessary to be educated in order to attain the high dignity of being a United States Senator.

If "Pat" 'goes abroad with pa," and receives the proper training, her name will become one of the brightest California has yet given to the world. She has the true dramatic spirit and talent.

In three and one-half months, up to the middle of last month fifty thousand people were brought into this State by the several railroads. A very large proportion of these are well to do and will settle here.

The spread of leprosy is causing alarm in Europe, the disease being traced to contact with Chinese. It is particularly noticeable among soldiers, sailors, merchants, missionaries, sisters of charity, and others whose vocations bring them in contact with Chinese.

It is said to be certain that the Committee on Elections will report in favor of Lynch getting the seat now occupied by Vandever for this, the Sixth District of California. The Committee will also report in favor of Sullivan getting the seat occupied by Felton.

So great has been the rush of people to California this winter that the railroads have been unable to bring them as fast as they wanted to come. In one instance persons waited six days in Kansas before they could secure accommodations or sleeping cars to bring them here.

California is bound to be ahead in everything. A San Francisco boy, Joe McAuliffe, aged only twenty-three years, lammed the stuffin' out of Paddy Ryan in three rounds. Now it is expected that he can wallop John L. Sullivan. Success to our Joe; California wheat against Boston beans any day.

Half of the American party has seceded from the organization; it is announced that Marcus D. Boruck has resigned as Secretary of the State Central Committee of the party and has returned within the Republican lines and will hereafter stay there. Mr. Pixley is now, like Missus Gummage, "a one, lorn crester."

A Well Pleased Audience.

The audience that met at Mairs' Hall last Monday evening expressed the warmest satisfaction with the entertainment. Beyond question it was the most successful entertainment we have had in many a day. Mr. Ford is highly gratified with the reception given himself and pupils, and deeply grateful for the valuable assistance rendered by friends at Independence. Lovers of music were much pleased with the selections rendered by the pupils of Mr. Ford; more especially as evidence of a growing taste among us for the beautiful art. The friends who assisted were very warmly applauded and encores frequent. "I'm Going Abroad With Pa," "Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming," "Oh, How Delightful," the "Three Little Maids," "Dreaming," "Two Forest Nymphs," and comic selections by Messrs. Viel and Hakill, instrumental and vocal solos and duetts, all were very pleasing. Indeed, every part of the entertainment gave the highest satisfaction to the audience. The entire programme was rendered as published, and promptly at 9.15 the floor was cleared, the grand march played and dancing began. With an intermission for supper at Mairs' Hotel dancing was continued until 4 o'clock. Following is the programme as rendered:

It is asserted Henry Edgerton committed suicide. He was divorced from his first wife and did not live happily with his second.

Old settlers say there is more snow on the mountains now than at any corresponding period since 1873. There is certainly more now than at the beginning of spring last year.

All the mortgages on property in San Francisco aggregated but one dollar in ten of the total value of the property. No other city in the Union makes a better showing.

Copper has doubled in value within a short time. There is plenty of ore in Inyo county that carries a good percentage of copper, and at present prices it would pay to mine it.

Miss Story, the daughter of a clergyman in the North of Ireland, has won the literature scholarship of $500 a year for five years awarded by the Royal University of Ireland.

The heavy snow storms during the past week have delayed trains on the C. P. railroad. All the men that could be had were hired to shovel snow from the track in the neighborhood of Truckee.

The population of Los Angeles is estimated at 75,000. Not many years ago the town was little more than a lot of adobe huts. Now it has whole streets of as fine buildings as any city in the country.

Here is a piece of advice given to a young man eighteen hundred years ago. "See then speak no evil of any man." It would do the world a world of good if we would all take the advice as Timothy did.

It is said that Gustav Eisen, the well known raisin maker of Fresno county, made a trip through Owens valley a week or so ago. If he was here he kept very shady; we can't find any one who met him here.

Rev. G. W. De La Matyr, Superintendent of the Nevada Conference of the M. E. Church arrived at Bishop Creek early in the week. He will preach there on Sunday. Mr. De La Matyr is brother to the late Pastor of the Church at Independence.

A new town in Los Angeles has been named after the poet Whittier. It will never be snow-bound. The town is fourteen miles southeast from the city of Los Angeles; the present population is fully 600 and is rapidly increasing. The Express says as late as last May the town site was a field of waving grain.

In the land contest between Miss Kate Lane and Ben. T. Williams, for a 160 acre tract near Bishop Creek; the Register has decided that Williams having proven cultivation of the west half of the tract, he is entitled to the privilege of entering the same. No decision has been made regarding the east half of the tract.

A report has been sent in to the effect that Martin Mee was dangerously hurt near Lookout a few days ago. It appears that he was riding a horse belonging to John Eddy and when near the graveyard at Lookout the animal threw him, hurting him so severely that he was unconscious for several hours. No particulars have been received yet other than that he has been removed to Darwin.

The Bishop Creek band boys are traveling through the valley giving concerts at various places. The band reached Independence on Wednesday evening and made arrangements for a concert Friday evening. The went to Lone Pine next day and gave a concert there and returned to Independence Friday. Fifteen members of the band are in the company.

Los Angeles is wrestling with the problem how best to get rid of the city sewage. Here is a suggestion offered free of charge: Let them collect the stuff, bottle it up, advertise it extensively as a great medical discovery, and they can sell it all at a dollar a bottle. The nastier the vile rubbish is that is offered to the American people in the shape of a patent medicine the better it sells. Los Angeles bottled sewage would beat vinegar bitters.

It Pays Mono

It is well worth noting the result of the sheep license ordinance in Mono county. The Miner makes the following report: "Sheriff Wat Morgan, who is ex-officio Tax-Collector, has collected to date, under the Mono county sheep license ordinance, the sum of $4,275; and to this may be added $750 in penalties, aggregating $5,025. The cost of these collections will be about $300, thus leaving the county a clear gainer by about $4,725 of taxes on a class of property which has heretofore paid no tribute into the county for benefits received and liberties enjoyed. While we do not believe that $5,000 a year will repay the damage done to Mono county pastures, it shows the wisdom of our Board of Supervisors in passing the sheep license ordinance—an ordinance which should have been passed years ago. While we are informed that Sheriff Morgan has made very close collections, yet, among so many thousands, there is no doubt but what there were some black sheep that escaped.

An Invite At Los Angeles.

This is what the Los Angeles Express tells of the adventures of a man from Inyo county: "James Davis, a recent arrival in town from the verdant precincts of Inyo county, started out to see the elephant last night and finally brought up in a house of ill-fame on Alameda street. When Davis entered the maison he had $65 in his pocket. When he emerged he was minus his wealth, but the possessor of about as beautifully ebonized a pair of optics as one could wish to see. Davis says that on entering the place three or four hoodlums demanded that he treat them to drinks. He demurred, was forthwith set upon by the gang and robbed and beaten. He will get "John and Jane Doe" warrants out, both for his assailants and the women occupying the house." No man named James Davis is known in this vicinity.

Preferred Jail.

A young fellow named Levy was arrested lately at Santa Monica on a charge of swindling by the shell game. He was tried and found guilty; but before sentence was passed a friend said the young man was engaged to be married that same evening, and offered to give bail for his appearance in Court next morning if allowed to go and fulfill his engagement. The Court was willing to accept the bail, but Levy himself objected. "The old woman's got a gun," he muttered "and she says she'll do me up. I don't want to get married, nohow, so you'd just better let go, fellows, and let me inside the jug over night."

The greatest leverage was used in an endeavor to persuade young Levy to accept bail and be wedded, but it was no go. He was "dead afraid of the old woman and did'nt want any in his pie."

Small Pox.

Small-pox is prevalent in San Francisco and in Sierra county, and in other parts of the State. The most scientific school of medicine in the world, that of Paris, publishes the following remedy for small-pox. It is said to be as unfailing as fate, and cures in every instance. It is harmless when taken by a well person. It will also cure the scarlet fever. Here is the receipt: Sulphate of zinc, one grain; foxglove (digitalis), one grain; half a teaspoonful of sugar; mix with two tablespoonfuls of water. When thoroughly mixed add four ounces of water. Take a spoonful every hour. Either disease will disappear in 12 hours. For a child, smaller doses, according to age.

A Great Industry

The one product of all others in which Owens valley is best fitted by nature to excel, is raisins. In Fresno county the growth of this business has been wonderfully rapid. In 1884 Fresno packed a few dozen boxes of raisins; in 1885, a few hundred boxes; in 1886, several car loads were shipped from there, and this year of 1837, numerous car loads and several train loads, aggregating over 10,000,000 pounds, have been shipped to New York and other eastern cities. What astounding figures 1888 must have in store. Within the next five years Fresno's raisin production will require the entire business of one line of railroad to convey it across the continent.

A Valuable Servic Crippled.

Thanks to D. C. Grunow, of the U. S. Signal Corps, now stationed at Keeler, for a copy of the annual report of the chief signal officer of the army for the year 1887. The report shows the vast importance of the signal corps, not only to the army, but to the shipping interests, to farmers, stockmen, and in fact to everybody. The service is now seriously crippled by the penny wise economy of Congress in refusing or neglecting to make the necessary provision for expenses. Here is where a little of the surplus revenue could be used with advantage to the whole country.

That Well.

A gentleman at Petaluma writes that he will subscribe toward the expense of boring an artesian well here as an experiment. Tens of thousands of acres of the best fruit and vineyard land in the valley lies above the line of all canals now projected. With water enough to start vines and fruit trees this land would be the most valuable in the valley. Once fairly started the vines and trees would not need further irrigation. During the past two weeks we have not heard of anything being done toward setting subscriptions for the proposed experiment.

Two Much Credit

Last week too much credit was given to the snow department of the weather bureau. The beautiful began falling Thursday night and ceased about 8 o'clock next morning. Early Tuesday morning of this week a good steady downpour of rain set in and continued the whole day. From the valley it can be seen that there is an immense amount of snow on the mountains. This ensures an abundant water supply for the coming season.

Lodge Election.

The following have been elected officers of Inyo Lodge I. O. O. F. No. 301. P. H. Mack, N. G., P. W. Forbes, V. G., E. Robinson Treasurer, J. D. Blair, Sec. The officers were installed on Thursday evening. Following are the appointed officers, Thos. Crough, Warden, J. E. Shepherd, Conductor, A. Stucker, Grd. S. D. Thurston R. S. to N. G., S. G. Gregg, L. S. to N. G., W. James Jr. R. S. to V. G., R. C. Spear, L. S. to V. G.

The Stevens Ditch.

The Stevens ditch is progressing steadily. Up to this time work has been hindered two days this winter by bad weather. The force is now at work crossing the homestead of H. L. Clark about five miles south of Independence. Mr. J. V. Skinner, one of the owners, says the ditch will be finished in March. This work will make a very valuable improvement, and add largely to the assessable property of the county.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer. Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.
JOHN C. EVANS, SPOTTLAND, MO., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take as much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house, if they had to take the feathers from under their wife and babies to pay for it."
JOHN R. DODGE, JR., jeweler, NORMAL, ILL., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. 1st. It is the best machine ever invented by man. 2d. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. 3d. If you run short, you can not buy ours for $100."
I will ship a sample to thos. desiring an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best washer in the world for saving labor, clothes and soap. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

A Very Rapid Increase Under Decreasing Circumstances.

The assumed rapid decrease of the public debt of the United States, as shown in the statements published, has seemed very marvelous to foreigners. The experience of other nations with their public debts leads them to doubt the statements of this country. Most of them have continually increasing instead of decreasing national debts.

How then, they ask, can the United States diminish its debt so rapidly!

The prosperity of the people during all these years has been unabated. In fact the country has never seen such an era of general prosperity. The two conditions appear to be contradictory.

Are the statements true?

In one sense they are undoubtedly correct, but the public debt has largely increased since the war. It has accumulated to the great inventors and discoverers whose successful efforts have eased the burdens of labor and made pleasant the pathways of toil.

A grateful public should also acknowledge its indebtedness to those who have promoted health and happiness. The proprietors of Warner's safe cure have given to the public a specific for all kidney disorders, and the innumerable train of frightful diseases that are caused by them. The late public teacher, Dr. Dio Lewis, who seldom prescribed medicines of any sort, gave to this renowned specific his warm commendation, and said if he found himself suffering from any kidney disorder he should use it. Kidney disorders are the cause of 93 per cent., say the proprietors of that remedy, of all diseases. If you keep the kidneys in health, you have the greatest assurance of freedom from all disease.

Before the discovery of this remedy, bright's disease was deemed incurable. Now the number of victims of the dread kidney diseases, and all others caused by such diseases, who are by it snatched from death constantly increases, and as the efficacy of the remedy becomes more widely known those who have reason to be devoutly thankful that this wonderful specific has been made known to the world, multiply with rapidly-increasing ratio.

REDUCED NOBLEMEN.

The Pitiable Conditions Under Which Two Once Wealthy Men Died.

A remarkable case of destitution is reported from Lyons. For some days past a fine-looking, white-bearded old man in rags has stood at one of the entrances of the Guillotiere Bridge and extended his hands for alms. On his breast he wears a board on which are inscribed the words: "Petroviski, almost a centenarian, Count of Blanckenberg, born in Warsaw in January, 1789, now reduced to craving public charity." This really "unhapy nobleman" had actually fought and bled for Polish independence, and the loss or confiscation of his fortune sent him down the easy slope to misery. After having battled for a long time against adversity, age and infirmity overtook him, and he had no resource left but to beg. Another reduced nobleman was buried here in Paris a few days ago, but he had worked hard for a living to the very last. He was the Vicomte Richard de Verney, commonly called in the poor neighborhood where he lived "Pere Ludovic." He had not suffered like the scions of many noble families in France from the effects of revolutions, but had lost a large fortune by imprudent speculations. Undaunted by adversity, he set bravely to work, and did any thing to turn an honest penny. He was a messenger in the office of the Journal Officiel, which paper he carried about to subscribers. In the afternoon he sold other journals on the boulevards, and from eight o'clock in the evening until midnight he performed the duties of dresser in a theater. He was fifty-three years old, and has left a wife and three children, who, it is needless to say, are utterly destitute.—Paris Cor. London Telegraph.

SHE WASHED HERSELF.

How a Young Californian Managed His Best Girl.

A grown-up man, a man of mature years, would not have done it. He would have put his arm around her and said gently:

"Dear, I don't like your painting and powdering. It doesn't make you look nice."

And she would have told him that she thought it did, and if he didn't like it he could go and get another girl, or something like that. At the best she wouldn't have taken any notice of the remonstrance. But he was a young man, and that was not his way. He was going to take her to the theater, and, knowing her peculiarity, he put a powder puff and a box of rouge in his pocket. When she came down stairs he saw she was decorated as usual. He immediately pulled out his rouge and powder and painted himself up.

"What are you doing?"

"Only making myself handsome."

"I will not go out with you like that."

"Why not?"

"It would mortify me to death."

"Well, but you're just like that."

"That's a different thing."

"Well, I'll make a bargain. If you will wash off yours I will wash off mine."

"We don't go out then?"

"All right."

But she thought better of it and she accepted his bargain. She was very pretty after that.

—A resident of Hartford, Conn., is the inventor of a novel apparatus for timing horses. A clock with three hands—minute, second and quarter second—is started by the official timer. When the winning horse touches the wire the clock is stopped by electricity. At the same instant the current opens a camera, which photographs the horse and the clock-face.

—We think a good rectangular, common-sense education, hammered in tight, and rivited on both sides, would be far more practicable for the future welfare of children now in school than the fancy ornamental gingerbread polishing some of them are now receiving.

JAPANESE MECHANICS.

Artisans Who Do Their Work Just Opposite to Our Mode.

The Japanese are fine mechanics, and, though slow and deliberate, do their work with great precision and with exquisite finish. They do all work just opposite to our mode. If it were possible they would commence a house at the roof. They draw the plane toward them instead of from them, and make glue joints for the commonest purposes. They make their mortises so exact that water can not creep between the joints. They use the saw by cutting toward the hand instead of from it. All saws are very wide and have a straight handle, and yet they will rip a plank fifteen feet long so exactly and truly that a smoothing-plane will dress it down perfectly straight.

Few nails are used in the erection of houses. Corner studs are mortised into the sills so closely that they stand as if nailed and bolted. The plates are held with equal tightness. The siding is then set into grooves. When an old house is torn down its material becomes good timber for other purposes. One constantly sees a carpenter ripping up an old sill or post for new work. There are no saw-mills to speak of. Timber of the largest size is ripped by huge hand-saws worked by a single man. A contractor assured me he had seen a log five feet through thus cut. He was a Scotchman, and, therefore, told me the truth. I myself saw a log quite three feet through being thus cut into inch boards. The log was about ten feet long—was laid on a frame at a very oblique angle. The sawyer sat under it and cut it up before removing any of the boards. Timber is hewn in the woods into squares or octagons. Then it dries perfectly, and is generally cut into boards on the ground when the house is being erected. They do nice work in wood, but are slow. Their wages are about forty-five cents a day. When I use the word dollar and cents I speak of the Japanese dollar and cent, one-fourth less than our money. Americans here assure me they would prefer paying our wages and getting the thing done promptly than to await the dilatory movements and slow progress of the good and cheap native workmen.

The common stone work is very fine. There is no such thing as a rough wall on a natural bed. All stones are cut and set in exact joints; not in line work, but cut to fit upon one another in all shapes. I do not remember the technical name for this style. Bridges, piers, canal and mote walls are thus built, and many of the stones are of great size.

In Tokio there are many miles of walls, from thirty to sixty feet high, built of stones weighing from a hundred pounds to several tons, and all with joints so nice and true that no cement has been used, and none is necessary. It is a wonder how these poor, down-trodden people have done such vast work with no horses and no machinery to help them. All hauling, or nearly all, is done by men. I saw a single man drawing or pushing a load of nearly three hundred brick to the new palace at Tokio from the dock over a mile away. At the castle hill, which is quite a hundred feet high, several men assist.

It is a common thing to see two or three men pushing a load such as a heavy dray horse would draw in America. Two would be at the shaft, the other pushes. They step to a word all the time. The near man would utter something like "speough," the others would catch it and reply together "sheoughah."

During the day in quarters where heavy loads are being drawn or heavy work being done some such cry as this is heard in every direction, though I will say, parenthetically, that one of the charms of these cities is the absence of loud and deafening noises. All great cities of Europe and America have their voices. One can almost imagine he recognizes a distinct, peculiar voice in each city. In the still of the night this voice is marked, and never silent. A Japanese city after twelve o'clock seems to be absolutely asleep. There is no voice. It is as silent as the country, and if one awakes in the small hours he hears no sound. All is hushed and quiet. In some localities there are many trees. In these he hears the hum and song of insects, but this is the voice of the country, not of the city.—Carter H. Harrison, in Chicago Mail.

City Man in the Country.

The average man, city born and raised, is only too apt to regard somewhat contemptuously the simple art of the countryman as he follows the plow or hews the oak into well balanced rails, lightly imagining such tasks of easy acquirement and on a level with the rural intellect, and the spectacle that he presents when he would go and do likewise is often laughable. There is nothing, in fact, so calculated to shake the confidence of the young man who goes west to embark in farming or some kindred pursuit as the finding of his unfitness for some of the simplest manual tasks. He will discover that his superior metropolitan knowledge avails him but little and is lightly held by those about him—in short, that he is as unsophisticated in his new surroundings as would be the yokel in the city. He learns that even such despised work as currying a horse or driving a nail requires knowledge, and the chances are that if he is sensible his sense of toleration will be appreciably strengthened and his horizon widened before his palms are fairly hardened and he has grown accustomed to his new conditions.—Globe-Democrat.

—The American girl is cleverly pictured by Habberton in a novel: "She was the oldest child, so she had her own way; she was pretty, so she had always been petted; she was twenty, so she knew every thing that she thought worth knowing. She had long before reconstructed the world (in her own mind) just as it should be, from the stand-point that it ought to exist solely for her benefit. Not bad-tempered, on the contrary cheerful and full of high spirits, she was nevertheless in perpetual protest against every thing that was not exactly as she would have it, and not all the manners that careful breeding could impart could restrain the unconscious insolence peculiar to young and self-satisfied natures."

LIFE.

Our life is nothing but a winter's day,
Some only break their fast and so away;
Others stay dinner and depart full fed;
The deepest age but sups and goes to bed.
He's most in debt that lingers out the day;
Who dies betimes has less and less to pay.
—Quarles.

SHIPS.

They are still on the sea—but under what sky
The blue starry folds of their pennons do fly
I know not—I ask not—nor where they have been,
For they are the ships that will never come in!
—"C. A. S." in Youth's Companion.

THE CRAZY ROMANOFFS.

The Mental Disease Which Afflicts the Russian Imperial Family.

In the recently published memoirs of Count Vitzthum, of Eckstadt, proofs are given of the hereditary character of the mental disease which afflicted the imperial family of Russia. All the sons of Czar Paul I, like that unhappy monarch himself, who was murdered in 1801, became subject to fits of insanity. Paul I had four sons—Czar Alexander I, the Grand Duke Constantine, Czar Nicholas I and the Grand Duke Michael. Every one of them after his 45th year exhibited undoubted signs of mental derangement. This was not fully discovered in the case of Nicholas I until after the czar's death.

An English physician, however, the count says, noticed the appearance of the hereditary disease in the czar as early as July, 1853, and he then predicted that the monarch had not more than two years of life before him. This he stated in a letter to Lord Palmerston. The Emperor Nicholas died in March, 1855, about four months earlier than the date predicted. The count appears to have no doubt that the Crimean war, so far as it depended on Nicholas, was the rash act of a ruler "whose mental equipoise was disturbed." None of the four sons of Paul I lived to be 60 years of age, and every one of them suffered from congestion of the brain after reaching his 45th year. Alexander died at 48, a miserable man, moody and despondent, as Prince Metternich has painted him, "tired of existence."

His brother, the Grand Duke Constantine, though not manifestly insane, gave frequent signs of mental disturbance, of which he was himself so plainly conscious that he did not think himself fit to be trusted with the reins of government. His conduct in the year 1830, at the outbreak of the revolution in Warsaw, will remain to prove his mental unsoundness. He had to be intrusted to the care of his wife, the Princess Lowicz, who was cautioned in the same way as is a physician in charge of a patient having intermittent fits of insanity. He died in his 52d year from congestion of the brain. The Grand Duke Michael was killed by a fall from his horse at the age of 48. Some years before his death he had exhibited signs of undoubted mental disease, and his physicians declared that he was on the road to certain insanity.

The events of 1848–52 were not calculated to allay the hereditary dispositions of the imperial family of Russia, but to excite and intensify them. There is something terrible in the contrast between the outward position of the Czar Nicholas, upon the bent of whose will the fate of so many millions in Europe was depending, and the alleged diseased inward condition of his mind.—London Society.

PERSIA'S WILLIAM TELL.

A Pretty Little Fairy Tale From the Land of the Shah.

In the province of Nakhchewan there lived a youth renowned for his uncommon courage. His name was Demurchy-Oglou (the son of a blacksmith). Passing one day through the town bazar, he stopped to listen to the conversation of two Turks, who were extolling the liberality with which Kurroglou used to reward every brave man that entered his service. He said to himself: "My heart is bursting for want of action in this town. I must go and serve that warrior, who knows the value of men." He then got up, saddled his horse and, putting on his armor, rode toward Chambly-bill. Kurroglou at that time was hunting with his whole band. He looked before him, and, thinking that he saw a gazelle or some other game, put his horse to gallop in the direction of an object which appeared like a dark spot at a distance. It was Demurchy-Oglou. "Who art thou, young man, and whence dost thou come?" "I go to Chambly-bill. I have heard that Kurroglou, who lives there, is a liberal master and knows the value of menial desire to serve under him." Kurroglou said in his heart: "Fine lad this." He then gave him his reply: "My soul! I am Kurroglou. Thou hast heard I was liberal and always ready to give bread away, but thou must also know I only give it to the brave; the cowards get nothing from me." By that time Kurroglou's cavalry had joined him, and he then said: "My children—my souls! here have I hunted down my game." Saying these words he took an apple from his pocket and a ring from his finger. He fixed the ring into the apple and said to Demurchy-Oglou: "Sit down in the Persian mode." Then, turning to his servants, he ordered them to take off the cap from the head of the newcomer. He then placed the apple on the bare head of the latter and rode aside. He bent his bow and continued to pass one arrow after the other through the ring. Out of sixty arrows that were shot not one went astray. Kurroglou was glad to see that Demurchy-Oglou did not ever once wince or change his countenance. He said: "My souls!—my children! whoever loves me let him contribute toward Demurchy-Oglou's dress and saddle." In an instant the stranger found himself rich, so many things were given him. Kurroglou said: "It is not often that one can get into his service a youth like him."—Chodzko's Popular Poetry of Persia.

The Wardrobes of Kings.

The wardrobe of the late king of Bavaria has been sold at Munich, and the proceeds are to be applied toward the payment of his debts. The St. James' Gazette alludes to this transaction as a following of the precedent set in England, when George IV died, but this is an entire mistake, for his wardrobe became the perquisite of his pages, and it was sold by them for their own exclusive benefit. This was a monstrous job, as the wardrobe fetched an immense sum, and the public, who originally paid for it, ought to have obtained the proceeds. George IV left every coat he had bought for fifty years, 800 canes and whips, every description of uniform, the state costumes of all his orders and magnificent furs and pelisses, some of which had been sent to him by the emperors of Russia and Austria.—London Truth.

Creatures of Yesterday.

With all his pride at our progress, the thoughtful student beholds with dismay the rapid sweeping away of many animal and vegetable species which to future science would be most precious. In his biological address to the British Association, Prof. A. Newton lamented, as an example of what is being done, the disappearance of the birds of New Zealand. In the more thickly settled districts, imported species alone are now to be seen, while the natives are fast being pushed inland and must soon vanish. These native species are almost exclusively peculiar to that country and supply a link to the past that once lost can never be recovered. The forms of life that are being killed off are mostly the ancient ones, that must teach us more than the recent ones of the way life has been spread over the globe, and Prof. Newton therefore urges haste in gaining all possible knowledge of these creatures before they have passed away.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Got There in Time.

"What time is it, young man?" asked an old lady, all out of breath, as she struggled into the station.

"One thirty, ma'am."

"Thank goodness! I'm in time for the four o'clock train, then," she said, as she deposited a carpet-bag and a couple of bird-cages on the floor; "this travelin' about an' ketchin' railroad trains is upsettin' to the narvous system."—Life.

A VALUABLE MEDICAL TREATISE.

The edition of 1888 of the sterling Medical Annual, known as Hostetter's Almanac, is now ready, and may be obtained, free of cost, of druggists and general country dealers in all parts of the United States, Mexico, and indeed in every civilized portion of the Western Hemisphere. The Almanac has been issued regularly at the commencement of every year for over one-fifth of a century. It combines, with the soundest practical advice for the preservation and restoration of health, a large amount of interesting and amusing light reading, and the calendar, astronomical calculations, chronological items, etc., are prepared with great care, and will be found entirely accurate. The issue of Hostetter's Almanac for 1888 will probably be the largest edition of a medical work ever published in any country. The proprietors, Messrs. Hostetter & Co., Pittsburg, Pa., on receipt of a two-cent stamp, will forward a copy by mail to any person who cannot procure one in his neighborhood.

Being entirely vegetable, no particular care is required while using Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets." They operate without disturbance to the constitution, diet, or occupation. For sick headache, constipation, impure blood, dizziness, sour eructations from the stomach, bad taste in mouth, bilious attacks, pain in region of kidneys, internal fever, bloated feeling about stomach, rush of blood to head, take Dr. Pierce's "Pellets." HOW TO GAIN FLESH AND STRENGTH.

Use after each meal SCOTT'S EMULSION with Hypophosphites. It is as palatable as milk, and easily digested. The rapidity with which delicate people improve with its use is wonderful. Use it and try your weight. As a remedy for Consumption, Throat affections and Bronchitis, it is unequaled. Please read: "I used Scott's Emulsion in a child eight months old with good results. He gained four pounds in a very short time."—THO. PRIM, M. D., Alabama.

If Ferdinand of Bulgaria really wishes to make his reign a success he should engage Buffalo Bill for a short season.

"Good deeds," once said the celebrated Richter, "ring clear through heaven like a bell." One of the best deeds is to alleviate human sufferings. "Last fall my daughter was in decline," says Mrs. Mary Hinson, of Montrose, Kansas, "and everybody thought she was going into consumption. I got her a bottle of Dr. R. V. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription,' and it cured her." Such facts as the above need no comment.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION

Has recently been increased in size, making it by far the cheapest Illustrated Family Weekly published. That it is highly appreciated is shown by the fact that it has won its way into 400,000 families. The publisher issues a new Announcement and Calendar, showing increased attractions for the new year. If $1.75 is sent now, it will pay for THE COMPANION to January, 1889, and you will receive the admirable Double Thanksgiving and Christmas Numbers, and other weekly issues to January 1st, free.

INEXPENSIVE LIVING.

How a Healthy Person Can Live and Grow Fat on a Dime a Day.

At the gathering of scientists in Columbia College a learned professor fascinated his superintellectual hearers by telling them that a laboring man "needs daily one-fourth pound of proteine, one-fourth pound fat, and a pound of carbo-hydrates" to keep him well and strong. If the knowledge-seeking laborer goes to the store for his four ounces of proteine his experiment will scarcely increase his faith in the marketing knowledge of scientists. What the laborer and what most of us need more than technical essays on the "Physiological and Fecundary Economy of Food" is a plain talk about sensible feeding and economical marketing.

"How to live and thrive on a dime per day" may stand as the text for this talk. It certainly can be done, and, though the experiment may be uninviting, it is certain that good health is nearer akin to the simplest diet than to the costliest.

Now as to the laboring man and his proteine. Tell him that three-fourths of his weight is water, and that to restore the day's waste he has to take food, three-fourths of which must be water, and the remainder flesh-forming, heat-giving and bone-making substances, he will understand the case better. Give him a table of foods, analyzed to show just how much heat-giving, flesh-forming and mineral matter there is in each food, and he will soon take as deep an interest in what he eats because of its worth to him as because of its taste. When he finds out—as he can in half an hour—that only twenty-four parts in every hundred of butcher's meat count as flesh-formers, the rest being water, but that from seventy-five to ninety parts out of every hundred in dried peas, beans, oat and wheat meals and cheese are nutritious, and only ten to twenty-five parts waste water, he from that moment begins to use his common sense in feeding as he does in earning his living. The popular rule is: Never pay any heed to the feeding value of our diet; let us cultivate a glorious ignorance of the purpose of foods and go in might and main for palate-ticklers and dyspepsia.

Just a fact or two as appetizers. The great Peninsular and Oriental (P. and O.) Steamship Company employ East Indian coolies to do the hardest work on their steamers because they are stronger, healthier and stand the climate better than Englishmen, and because not being meat eaters—their diet costs only six cents per day. There are miners in the English coal-pits, the hardest workers in the land, who have not eaten any kind of meat for years. I am not a vegetarian, because I hanker after the flesh pots, and their savory odors cast a spell over my innocent soul; yet I experimented for one whole year without tasting flesh or gravy in any form, and all the time my health was perfect and my weight increased. The dock porters of Constantinople carry heavier burdens—two hundred and fifty pounds and upward—more easily than the laborers of England and America, yet their main diet is bread and figs, and they are teetotal and vegetarian. The laborers in Spain live chiefly on bread and onions, and are marvelously strong.

The flesh-and-blood superstition is baseless. A horse is almost as strong, swift, healthy and handsome as a two-legged man, and they both have the same internal machinery; the one eats beef and enjoys dyspepsia, the other avoids it and flourishes. Ten cents' worth of meat, oatmeal, rice, fruits, buttermilk, bread, cheese, onions or portions of several of these, will enable a man to do his ordinary day's work at least as well as any assortment of goods he can buy for a dollar.

What would be a good diet for those who do not need to study their purses, yet who would like a simple, healthy and enjoyable dietary? To such I would say drop the heavy meat breakfast right away. Not that meat is bad, but it is not the best to start the day on. Bread (not the spoiled white stuff, but the natural dark-colored wheat, as ground), tea or cocoa, eggs and the hundred and one non-flesh dishes, with a little fish, and as much fruit as you like. That's a model meal, as experience will prove.

Talking of fish, the more the better. Pound for pound it is as nutritious as flesh, though it doesn't seem to fill us so fully, and its chemical value is far above that of meats. When I have extra hard brain work to do, say an average of twelve or fourteen hours for two or three weeks at a stretch, I knock off meats entirely and eat all the fish I can. Result, perfect health and strength and no headaches.

For dinner, fish, soups (I am not excluding meat, though soups can be made without it that taste just the same and are quite as good every way), puddings, desserts.

I knew an eminent lady who for forty years had never tasted meat. She was a marvel of mental and physical strength. Another author friend kept his health and his average weight of one hundred and sixty pounds on a diet that never included meat, the average cost of his food being only six cents per day. Another, a well-known literary man, who looked as beefy as a butcher, was, when I last met him, in his eighth year of strict abstinence from flesh. Another friend, a hard literary worker, has been practically a life-long vegetarian, but he looks too shriveled up to be a champion specimen.—Richmond (Va.) Dispatch.

THE NAN-GIN-TSIN.

A Description of the Largest Opium Den in the Chinese Empire.

The Nan-gin-tsin is the greatest opium den in China. It is situated in the French concession in Shanghai, within a stone's throw of the wall of the native city, within which no opium shops are supposed to exist. The throngs visiting it represent all stations of life, from the coolie to the wealthy merchant or the small mandarin. It is with difficulty that one gets inside through the crowds of people hanging round the door. Those who have not the requisite number of copper cash to procure the baneful pipe watch with horrible wistfulness each of the more affluent pass in with a nervous, hurried step, or totter out wearing that peculiar dazed expression which comes after the smoker's craving has been satisfied and his transient pleasure has passed away. One requires a strong stomach to stand the sickening fumes with which the air inside is thickened. The clouds of smoke, the dim light from the numerous colored lamps, the numbers of reclining forms with distorted faces bent over the small flames at which the pipes are lighted, cause the novice a sickening sensation.

But as soon as the eye becomes accustomed to the scene it is noticed that the place is got up on an expensive scale. In the centre of the lower room hangs one of the finest of Chinese lamps, the ceiling is of richly carved wood, while the painted walls are thickly inlaid with a peculiarly marked marble, which gives the idea of unfinished landscape sketches. Numerous doors on all sides lead to the smokers' apartments. In the outer portion of the building stands a counter covered with little boxes of the drug ready for smoking, which a dozen assistants are kept busy handing out to the servants who wait upon the habitues of the place. The average daily receipts are said to be about £200. The smoking apartments are divided into four classes. In the cheapest are coolies, who pay about fourpence for their smoke. In the dearest the smoke costs about sevenpence. The drug supplied in each class is much the same both in quality and quantity; it is the difference in the pipes that regulates the price.

The rooms also are furnished according to class. In the most expensive the lounge upon which the smoker reclines is of fine velvet, with pillows of the same material; the frames of each couch are inlaid with mother-of-pearl and jade, and the whole air of these rooms is one of sensuous luxury. There is also a number of private rooms. In the poorer section will be seen many wearers of the tattered yellow and gray robes of Buddhist and Tavist priests. Women form a fair proportion of the smokers. The common belief is that the opium sleep is attended by a mild pleasurable delirium, with brief glances of Elysium; but this is the exception, not the rule. People smoke to satisfy the craving begotten of previous indulgence. There is accommodation for one hundred and fifty smokers at a time, and there is seldom a vacancy very long. The streams of smokers goes on from early morning till midnight, when the place closes; the clouds of smoke go up incessantly all day long.—North China Herald.

THE BEST POLICY.

A Doctor Considers Honesty the First Great Essential in a Sick-Room.

"What is the first great essential in the sick-room?"

Three score or more of young nurses struggled with this question at a recent examination until their heads, hearts and hands ached, and the old gray-headed professor who put the question smiled and shook his head in the negative as one after another got up and tried to answer the conundrum in a manner satisfactory to their aged and experienced interrogator. The answers ranged from "quietude," "air" and "a patient" through the list of pharmaceutical preparations down to "a good doctor" and "a good nurse," when finally the professor answered the question himself.

"Honesty. That is the first great thing necessary in a sick room," said he. "The best time to begin the career of an honest nurse is when you first enter the sick-room. Do so boldly, honestly and at once. Do not spend five minutes turning the door handle like a housebreaker, and produce a series of little clicks, finally terminating in a loud snap. Go into the room quietly, of course, but let it be in a manner that shows you have a right there. Never say to your patients, 'Hush!' Any appearance of mystery only excites them and should by avoided. It is also well to do all things necessary when they should be done. This waiting for the patient to fall asleep is dishonest in the extreme. Because a sick man's eyes are shut it does not follow that he is asleep. He may be acutely conscious of all that is going on. Do not be officiously attentive. Such a practice is really one of the most common forms of dishonesty in the sick-room. Patients often yield to suggestions from such persons in sheer extremity. They do so for the sake of peace. I was in a sick-room recently when a relative of the sufferer arrived. She had come to nurse the patient. I told her to repress all emotion, and this is how she did it: 'Shall I raise your head a little? Let me fan you. Will you have the blind up? Do let me give you another pillow! What can I get for you? Try some arrowroot. Perhaps you would rather have tea; it won't take a minute to make it. Isn't there too much draft for you?' "—N. Y. Mail and Express.

FACTS ABOUT THE SEA.

Some Interesting Considerations Presented by the Depths of the Ocean.

The sea is the reservoir into which run all the rivers of the world. It is the cistern which finally catches all the rain that falls, not only upon its own surface, but upon the surface of the land and upon the roofs of our homes. All this water is removed again by evaporation as fast as it is supplied. It is estimated that every year a layer of the entire sea, fourteen feet thick, is taken up into the clouds. This vapor is fresh, and if all the water could be removed in the same way and none of it returned, it is calculated that there would be left a layer of pure salt two hundred and thirty feet thick on the bed of the Atlantic.

This is upon the supposition that three feet depth of water contains one inch depth of salt, and that the average depth of the ocean is three miles. At a depth of about three thousand five hundred feet the temperature is uniform, varying but a trifle between the poles and the equator. The colder water is below. It is reported that in many deep bays on the coast of Norway, the water often begins to freeze at the bottom before it does at the surface. At this depth waves are not felt. Waves do not travel—that is, the water does not move forward, although it seems to do so; it stays in the same place. The rising and falling moves on.

We measure waves by their height, and by the distance from crest to crest. In deep water this latter distance is about fifteen times the height of the wave. In shallow water the proportion is less, and this makes a choppy sea. The force of waves is in proportion to their height. It is said that the sea strikes on Bell Rock with the force of seventeen tons for each square yard. The pressure of the water increases as we go down. At the depth of a mile this pressure is reckoned at more than a ton to the square inch, that is, more than a hundred and thirty-three times the pressure of the atmosphere.

To get correct sounding in deep water is difficult. A shot weighing thirty pounds carries down the line. Through this sinker a hole is bored, and through the hole is passed a rod of iron which moves easily back and forth. In the end of the bar a cup is dug out, and the inside is coated with lard. The bar is made fast to the line and a sling holds the shot on. When the bar, which extends below the shot, touches the bottom, the sling unhooks and the shot slides off. The cup in the end of the bar holds some of the sand, or whatever may be on the bottom, and a cover shuts over the cup to keep the water from washing the sand out. In this way we learn the character of the deep sea bottom. It will be seen at once that we can know the depressions of the bottom of the ocean more easily and more accurately than we can learn the elevation of the land. As a consequence we have a better topographical map of much of that surface than we have of the continents.

The depth of the sea presents some interesting considerations. If the Atlantic were lowered six thousand five hundred and sixty-four feet, it would be reduced to half its present width. If it were lowered a little more than three miles, there would be dry land all the way between Newfoundland and Ireland. If the Mediterranean were lowered six hundred and sixty feet, Africa would be joined to Italy, and three separate seas would remain.—Youth's Companion.

THE GIRLS OF TO-DAY.

The Noble Womanhood Into Which They Will Undoubtedly Come.

Nice as most girls are, they are not all of the kind to make matrimony a state of bliss and husbands content with their lot. For in this thickly-thronged field of girlhood are the peevish and the contradictious, the selfish and the extravagant, the idle and the careless, the jealous and the unloving, the stupid and the obstinate, the flirts who encourage unseemly attentions, and the future mothers who will think their children so many hindrances to pleasure, and who will not have in their hearts either human love or animal instinct for their young. The heaven is not always all pure blue—flowers are not all perfect and fragrant; and humanity is like the rest of nature—when beautiful and love worthy, then most delightful—when hacked and seamed and marred, then not by any means delightful! But on the whole the choice girls far outnumber those who are not choice. The elders of this generation may not like this new folly and that fresh affectation—but those elders must remember that each new generation makes its own shibboleths, has its own fashions, and that youth must needs be foolish, else it would not be youth at all. That pump-handle shake is hideous and ungraceful; so are those agressive elbows stuck out at right angles from the shoulders to the hip; so is that silly fashion of quasi-masculinity in dress; and worse than foolish is the affectation of manly thought and freedom from feminine modesties—of manly license and absence of feminine restraints. But all this effervescence will work off in time and leave the golden liquid clear and sweet—until another fermentation sets in, with the same process of running clear when it is over. Our grave grannies—our sweet mothers—we ourselves, now grannies and mothers to the present young—have all had the affectations and follies of youth in our time. Let us then be patient with our girls, and lovingly confident of the noble womanhood into which they will eventually come.—London Queen.

ABOUT ADVERTISING.

The High Character of the Newspaper Advertisements of To-day.

An advertisement of the present day, as a rule, is a model of clearness, precision and compactness. In fact, quite a degree of pleasure can be derived from the perusal of it, aside from the important information which it oftentimes conveys.

In ingenuity the modern advertisement is remarkable; in fact, it is frequently a work of art, both in a literary and typographical sense. The aim of some advertisers in many cases seems to be to draw the attention of the reader away from the fact that it is an advertisement. While not taking rank among what may be termed literary productions, it possesses many of their brightest features. In the hands of a master workman, be he advertiser, writer or compositor, the matter becomes attractive to the most casual reader. The latter's attention is drawn toward it, and his interest in it aroused before he is fully aware of the merely puffing one's merchandise has passed out of date. The reading and purchasing public of to-day demand something stronger and better. That this want is recognized and appreciated by the keen advertiser and equally alert public is apparent to almost every one. The fact is advertising has become such an integral part of modern business methods that it is almost impossible to carry on any kind of trade or traffic without its aid. It is well known that many concerns pay large salaries to skilled writers whose only employment is the invention and the framing of attractive and telling advertisements.

Thousands of dollars are annually expended simply in putting the matter in shape, and many millions more for its publication in the press. The firm who can express in clear, strong and concise language, set in attractive form of display, just what it has to offer, at once attracts the merchant as well as the consumer.

No merchant can now wholly depend for business upon the fact of his being well known to the trade. No matter how many years he may have been established, or how familiar his name is to the purchasing public, or how celebrated his wares are, if he does not advertise and keep doing so in some way, buyers and consumers will in time ignore him and visit and trade with his competitor who sounds his trumpet upon all occasions to the extent of thousands of dollars a year, and pays the same without murmur because it pays him to do so.

THE AMERICAN SWISS.

Where They Are Located and Some of Their Characteristics.

According to the most definite information obtainable the Swiss or Switzers number fully 250,000 souls in the United States. In the Western States they devote themselves principally to farming and the making of cheese. In the Eastern States they are found in the silk industries of New Jersey, largely in Paterson, and also in the watch and clock towns of Connecticut and Massachusetts.

A national peculiarity is their clannishness and unwillingness to resign their characteristic peculiarities. About thirty societies or clans have acquired comparative prominence. Among them are: The Switzers in Monroe County, Ohio, established 1819; Highland, in Madison County, Illinois, established 1836; New Glaris, in Green County, Wisconsin, established 1845; Tell City, in Perry County, Indiana, 1859; Grisly, in Grundy County, Tennessee, 1868; Helvetia, in Randolph County, West Virginia, 1869; New Switzerland, in Habershaw County, Georgi 1879; Ruth, in Platte County, Nebraska, 1880; Bernstadt, in Laurel County, Kentucky, 1881.

In the city of New York there are about fifteen thousand Swiss, and they have twenty-six societies—nine for benevolent purposes, eight singing, five sporting and four literary and social. The most conspicuous is the Nord-Amerikanische Grulti Bund, a benevolent organization, whose headquarters change every four years. It has thirty-eight branches or sections in different States. Its main object is the assistance of members in case of need and a provision for their families in case of death. It also discusses subjects affecting the Swiss-Americans, and fosters a love and reverence for the fatherland.

The one Swiss political club came into existence during the Presidential campaign of 1876. It has now a representation in all the important towns, and it is known as the Swiss-American Political Society. Yet it is difficult to find a Switzer who is familiar with the subtleties of our politics.

Outside the State of New York the greatest number of Swiss are in Ohio, and following rapidly behind are Wisconsin, Illinois, New Jersey, Indiana, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, etc., the Western States receiving large numbers of immigrants during the past two or three years. The Southern States are now rapidly filling up with steady and persistent Swiss immigrants.

Many Swiss have obtained a reputation in science, literature, military and business channels. The first foreigner who had a seat in the Cabinet was a Swiss—Albert Gallatin. The first chief of the United States Bureau of Coast Survey was a Swiss—Rudolph Hassler, and he created the office. The first gold discovered in America was on the property of a Swiss—General Sutter. One of our greatest resident scientists was a Swiss—Professor Agassiz. Such well-known names as Roscoff, Professor Guizot, Schlatter, recall Switzers of world-wide repute. One of the largest silk importers here is a Swiss; the famous Delmonico family hails from Switzerland; so does Monquin, the Fulton street restaurateur; Iselin, the banker; and Oscar Zollikoffer, president of the gas company, are Swiss.—N. Y. Herald.

PLEASANT REMEDIES.

An Entertaining and Successful Case of Mind Cure.

Speaking of the mind cure reminds me of a case of shrewd management on the part of a physician, who was consulted by a patient suffering from an aggravated case of author's cramp. The doctor examined the patient and inquired into the circumstances, the result being that he became convinced that the whole trouble was purely imaginary. The young man had suddenly been given an order for an important work which he was most anxious to write, but which must be finished within a specified and rather limited time. Of an imaginative turn of mind and full of fear lest something should prevent him from accomplishing the work, writer's paralysis had unluckily suggested itself to his mind and the result was a complete inability to write at all.

"Ah, well," the doctor said, "it is a pity; but the more you fret the more you lower the tone of your system, and the longer it will take you to get over it. Come over and see us to-night. We can play whist, or something. You need livening up."

The melancholy and hypochondriac young author passed the evening at the physician's, and a most merry evening they had, the wife and daughters of the host having been beforehand instructed to entertain the guest to the best of their ability. The visitor gradually forgot all about himself, and before the evening was over was as merry as a grig. Just as he was taking his leave the doctor said to him, as if on the spur of the moment:

"O, before you go please write me out the name of that French book we were speaking of. I did not understand how you spelled the author's name."

Quite unconscious of the trap laid for him, the guest did as requested, said good night and took his leave. In the morning he received a note from the physician, saying:

"By the way, I forgot to remark last night after you wrote that card for me, that there must be some mistake about your having author's cramp."

To which the author replied in his own handwriting:

"There was no mistake, but I regret the speediness of my cure since your remedies are as pleasant as they are efficacious."—Boston Letter.

HISTORIC BASS

A Visit to a Dead and Ruined Portuguese City in India.

After a frugal breakfast, I engaged a bullock cart for the four miles and a half to the town or fort of old Bassein. There are no springs to the typical bullock cart, and your best position is to sit flat on the bottom of the contrivance. If you have a tuft of hay for a cushion, that is clear gain. My two little bullocks started off in frisky style, and in an hour I was within the narrow and winding streets of the town which has grown up outside the old one, and yet must have had its beginnings even during the existence of the original Bassein. The scenery from the station to Bassein proper is charming, and I thoroughly enjoyed it, notwithstanding the many and almost dislocating motions of the cart. Fields of rice and various other grain stretch out on either hand. Here and there was a pond which was all radiant with the sacred lotus in full flower and fragrance. One of the most conspicuous objects on getting fairly into the village was a ruined church. Its wall and roof were entire, but it was in wretched condition. Its windows were a curiosity, the first I had seen in India where the panes were of the pearl-oyster shell, cut thin, and about an inch and a half square. This was the Portuguese window. The labor of making great windows of such small pieces of shell neatly cut and smoothed must have been immense, even for one building. At least one-half the light was obstructed by the shell strata, and when one adds to this the wooden framing for the shells, there must have been a considerable addition to the semi-opaqueness. But then this is India, and it is always a study to keep out the glare of the sun.

I soon left the town behind, and came upon a rising ground by a winding road, through a thick grove of mango and peepul trees. Off to the left stood the grim ruins of the old fort. I had now crossed the bridge, and so had passed upon the island of Bassein, which is about four miles long and two miles broad. This, nearly three centuries ago, was a very paradise of Portuguese enterprise and luxury on the one hand, and of Jesuit worldy wisdom on on the other. Any way that I might turn brought me face to face with some vast ruined cathedral. Now it was only the bare walls without ceiling or roof, and then I found myself walking over the marble slabs, with nearly effaced inscriptions, which covered the dust of Portuguese ecclesiastics and fidalgos. The dead underlay the entire nave and chair of the church. Some of the towers leaned at threatening angles, and yet in several cases it seemed safe enough to climb to the top of the wall and overlook this weird scene of ruin. There were arches which rose in graceful curves from one side of the portal to the other. Yet at the keystone there was a depression in many instances which made it the part of wisdom not to linger directly in the neighborhood of any of them. Occasionally the central part of the wall had fallen outright, and left the jagged ends of the ruin on either hand.

Great pains had been taken to ornament the choir. Here was an elaborate sculpture, only fragments of which could be seen in scattered pediments and capitals, and bits of the carved shafts themselves. Where the walls had been less disturbed by the ravages of war and the elements there still remained tablets in memory of ecclesiastic or civic officers whose lamp of life had gone out here, far away from the dear Portugal which they left behind, but hoped in every case to see again and die beneath the western sun.—Bishop Hurst, in Harper's Magazine.

POSTAGE STAMPS.

How They Are Engraved, Printed, Perforated and Packed.

In printing steel plates are used, on which two hundred stamps are engraved. Two men are kept at work covering them with the colored inks and passing them to a man and girl, who are equally busy at printing them with large, rolling hand presses. Three of these little squads are employed all the time, although ten presses can be put into use in case of necessity. After the small sheets of paper upon which the two hundred stamps are engraved have dried enough they are sent into another room and gummed. The gum used for this purpose is a peculiar composition made of the powder of potatoes and other vegetables, mixed with water, which is better than any other material, for instance, gum-arabic, which cracks the paper badly. This paper is also of a peculiar texture, somewhat similar to that of bank notes. After having again been dried, this time on little racks which are fanned by steam-power for about an hour, they are put in between sheets of pasteboard and pressed in hydraulic presses capable of applying a weight of two thousand tons. The next thing is to cut the sheets in halves, each sheet, of course, when cut contains a hundred stamps. They are then passed to two other squads, who; in as many operations, perforate the sheets between the stamps. Next, they are pressed once more, and then packed and labeled and stored away in another room, preparatory to being put in mail-bags for dispatching to fill orders. If a single stamp is torn or in any way mutilated, the whole sheet of one hundred is burned. Five hundred thousand are burned every week from this cause. For the past twenty years not a single sheet has been lost, such care has been taken in counting them. During the progress of manufacturing the sheets are counted eleven times.—Cor. Chicago Journal.

A Great Through Line.

A railroad called the Nevada and California is being built from Reno northward. The road was begun and about thirty miles of it built five years ago. The company got into difficulties and very little work was done on the road until a few months ago, when work was resumed and the road is now being pushed ahead It is intended to continue the road to Lassen and Modoc counties, in this State, and thence into Oregon. By extending the Carson & Colorado road to Reno connection would be made with the Nevada & California road, and this would give unbroken line east of the mountains from Oregon on through Owens Valley to Los Angeles and San Diego, so soon as the intended extension of the Carson & Colorado railroad shall be made southward. This would then be one of the greatest lines of railroad in the United States.

"I traveled with D. L. Bliss, Vice President of the Carson & Colorado railroad Company from Los Angeles to Reno recently," said A. E. Ross, of Long Valley, in the Lassen Mail office recently; "and Mr. Bliss said that as soon as the Nevada & California tapped Northern California a connection with the road would be made by laying a line of narrow gauge track from Reno to the Mound House, and that the Carson & Colorado would then be pushed rapidly from its present terminus to Los Angeles through this section and connected with the Northern Pacific." Mr. Ross is confident that this road will be built some day. This is an important matter for the people of this section. It can be relied on as the present programme of both companies.

The New Road.

Much interest is taken by the people of Inyo county in the probable route of the Salt Lake and Los Angeles railroad. Alexander Badlam, of San Francisco, is interested in the road and is reported by the San Francisco Examiner as saying that in a general way it can be said that it will run from Salt Lake City west, along the southern shore of the Great Salt Lake, and then southwest in Utah, very close to the Nevada State line for a considerable distance. The State line will then be crossed and the line will run southwest through Nevada to the south of the Meadow valley range. On entering California the Calico Mining District will be pierced and the Atlantic & Pacific road will be crossed at Barstow. From that point the line will continue southwest through Arroyo Seco Canyon back of Pasadena, and thence through the latter town to Los Angeles. The whole length of the road will be 641 miles. At a point north of the Calico Mining District a branch will be built over to Mojave, which will make the distance from Salt Lake City to Mojave 541 miles.

This route would almost, if not entirely, keep the road outside of Inyo county. At most the road would not more than touch the county at its extreme southeast corner.

Representative Woodburn, of Nevada, has introduced a bill in Congress to amend the silver coinage law. As the law now stands it provides that not less than two millions nor more than four millions of silver dollars shall be coined at the several mints each month. During the last fiscal year thirty-four millions of silver dollars were coined. The amendment of Mr. Woodburn provides that not less than four millions shall be coined each month. He says if his proposed amendment shall be adopted it would absorb in coinage the entire silver production of the country and only exceed by fourteen millions what was coined last year. The excess over the coinage of last year would be very little more than twenty cents per capita of the whole people; it can not be said that this would be a dangerous inflation.

GERMAN CAVALRYMEN.

THE NORMAL SCHOOL WHERE OFFICERS ARE INSTRUCTED.

Skill Imparted Which Makes Better Riders Than Are Seen in a Circus—How Efficiency Is Acquired—A Hunting Ground of 5,000 Acres.

There are two cavalry schools in Germany, one in Hanover and a minor one in Munich, but it is not to be imagined for a moment that either of them compares even in the least degree with West Point, except in the rather important matters of discipline and training. The exquisite lawns, the magnificent views, the appearance of historic associations, the beautiful grounds and cottages of the officers and professors at West Point, and the atmosphere of perfect refinement and good society that clusters like an aroma about it, as it might in kind about the country-seat of a wealthy and highly educated gentleman, are all wanting. On the contrary, the otherwise well constructed barracks of the riet schule, with long stables extending back and across an open rectangular drill-ground in the rear, have nothing about them suggestive of anything but their exact purpose.

When the officers enter the school they have already been well trained by those who have preceded them here, but they are put on the footing of raw recruits at once. The first year they ride three different horses every day, the object being to acquire a good seat, and skill in the use of the sword. The first horse is a so-called "stampferd" (a common, well-trained trooper,) belong to the school. The second horse is called a "charger," which in German military usage signifies a raw 5-year-old colt. The latter is to be trained and broken by the officer who rides him, and after being ridden five years becomes his private property, at which time he receives another to be trained in the same way. Each officer (they are at first all licutenants) is also obliged to provide an extra horse, which must be so well trained that it can replace the charger in case of injury or indisposition.

HOW EFFICIENCY IS ACQUIRED.

Throughout the winter there are biweekly lectures on riding, veterinary surgery, and also on horse-shoeing, with thorough instruction in turning and fencing, in all of which complete practical efficiency is acquired. The second year, as far as the routine referred to is concerned, is a repetition of the first.

The non-commissioned officers ride two already well-trained horses daily, and are trained to become rough riders and trainers of new horses in their own regiments. The majority remain in the school only one year, though the twelve best are usually kept through the second year. The instructors in the non commissioned officers department in the second year are the twelve best-trained lieutenants from the officers' department.

In view of the peculiar duty of a cavalry and artillery officer, the medium between the rough riding of hunting and the steeple-chase on the one hand and the fine equestrianism of the haute ecole (high school) on the other is supposed to afford the proper training. Few better localities, therefore, could be chosen than Hanover, with a hunting ground which covers 5,000 acres, and is so full of grass-hidden ditches, boggy ground, and scattered marshy spots that it would perhaps puzzle the most skillful English rider to cross it in safety.

The school opens the 1st of October with hunting three times a week, the game being foxes, stags and boars. The young officers of the first year are not allowed to hunt at once, but have twelve preparatory "drags" with anise-seed bags in order to get acquainted with the country, and bring their horses into good hunting condition. The first actual hunting on St. Hubert's day, Nov. 3, is looked forward to with delight. The Hanover field is famous, and there are often a hundred and fifty riders at the meet in brightly-colored suits, and as the whole cavalcade goes dashing across the country, with the master of the hounds and his "whips" clad in scarlet, and the sixty deep voiced English hounds baying through the echoing forests the spectacle is full of interest and excitement.

In the haute ecole (within doors) a superlative skill is imparted which makes better riders than are usually seen in a circus, and it has a direct practical bearing in the cavalry service. It would be impossible to describe its intricacies in a single letter, but its essential value will be understood when I say that a horse learns in the haute ecole to respond to the rider's control nearly as perfectly as the rider controls and directs his own movement, so that the animal becomes measurably the pliant instrument of his will.

TRAINED TO A WONDERFUL DEGREE.

He is taught to stop instantly in full course, without injury to his joints, by receiving the shock with his hind legs. He also learns to jump from "all fours" and slight a foot or two or three feet forward, as required, and is trained to a wonderful degree in making sudden, short turns, and in moving back and forth in a crowd to enable his rider in actual combat to use his sword effectively, to extricate himself readily, and to be sure that when he strikes his horse will be at the requisite distance from the mark; all of which, in spite of its marvelously graceful evolutions, gives a frightfully grim and premeditated aspect to the art of war. Both systems of training accomplish together the desired results, but in the haute ecole the rider become a master.

The kennels at the riding schools, where sixty hounds, with their accompanying terriers, sleep in a tiled room on a raised, straw-covered platform, and are kept scrupulously sweet and clean, form an interesting feature of the establishment, and as we watched the dogs bounding about in their play ground, the great splendid fellows came to us singly as their names were called, with a gravity befitting their importance in the kaiser's military service.

Throughout the long, clean, well-lighted stables, another interesting point, there was a fresh, bright, continuous carpet of straw behind the horses, secured by a tightly-braided straw rope, with which it was interwoven, and the round beams, in lieu of partitions,, were wrapped in a glossy coat of tightly-braided straw, with a sort of loose straw apron hanging beneath. The horses, of course, are thoroughly groomed and glossy. The crowning glory, however, of the stables is the "jagd stall," which lies near where the officers, without stirrups or bridles, leap successfully, in a long narrow lane, over fences, bars, walls, and ditches on horses that alight with cat-like grace and softness. The jagd stall itself contains thirteen picked and trained "hunters" of the best breeds in comfortable box-stalls befitting their exceptional skill.—Berlin Letter.

THE DRINKS OF CUBA.

BEVERAGES THAT ARE PALATABLE AND WHOLESOME.

A List of the Distinctively National Drinks Which Delight the Citizens of Havana—The Ever Welcome Lemonade and the Divine Horchata.

There is not even a sentiment against liquor drinking in Cuba. Yet in Cuba you will not find a drunkard. I leave this for the discussion of others, setting down the bare fact. All liquors that we know are used freely. But what is a drink of liquor here would not flavor the breath of the average American. And besides, native and distinctively national beverages are remarkable in number and variety. Some of them are so healthful and delightful that they should become better known.

The panales are the base of a univesal drink in Cuba. They are simply little snowwhite loaves made by quickly baking whipped whites of eggs to which sugar has been added. Two of these are temptingly laid upon the top of your glass of water, and a long, slender spoon is also served. The delicate panales are dropped in the glass, thoroughly stirred until diluted in the water when "panales" is ready for drinking. Naranjada is simply Spanish for orangeade. Three or four great, luscious oranges are reduced to pulp, a little pulverized sugar is added, and a bit of finely broken ice stirred in, the whole forming a splendrink. Of a like nature and similarly prepared is refesco de pina, for which one half of a great juicy pineapple is used, a pineapple so large and luscious that the American feels that he has never before known this fruit. The last two beverages are regarded as "meat and drink" by the Cubans. Guanavana, or literally sour-sop, is made from a fruit of the same name containing a pulp of the consistency of white cotton, interspersed with diminutive black, bean-like seeds. This food contains a sub-acid of remarkable flavor, and the beverage is particularly palatable and wholesome, holding the highest of any in Cuba.

EXQUISITE IN FLAVOR.

Tamarindo is from the fruit of the tamarind, the tree being considered the most beautiful of any on the island. Enormous quantities of preserves made from the tamarind fruit are exported to Europe. It is exquisite in flavor, possessing both sweet and acid properties, which give it great demand for use in a form of a beverage. Aqua de coco is the water-clear liquid of the green cocoa-nut, which, as the ripening process progresses, becomes milky white until absorbed in the formation of the white cocoanut meat. The pure liquid is used with the addition of ice only. It is not unpleasant to one unaccustomed to drinking it, but one must acquire a liking for it. It is said to possess wonderfully healthful properties, especially for use in the tropical climate, and you will see in every cafe half a cartload of the uncouth and shapeless green nuts piled behind the bar. They bear no resemblance whatever to the ripened coconnuts.

Ensalada is merely liquid salad, of which Cubans are very fond, and flavored with fruit sirups. Cebada or barley water is an infusion of barley in water that is allowed to stand but twenty-four hours, or until fermentation has scarcely begun. It is the closest approach to any fermented beverage of native production with which the Cubans can be charged. There is, of course, here as everywhere, the ever-welcome lemonade, which is about the only palatable non-intoxicant we have in America, aside from the deadly soda waters. It is here made from limes exclusively, and is far preferable to that made with the juice of the lemon if you can prevail upon him who prepares it to use a sufficient number of the little limes.

THE DIVINE HORCHATA.

Cuban lemonade is usually waterspoiled by sugar. But the beverage that is made here more deliciously than in any other part of the world is horchata, to which I have previously referred in these papers. Horchata is really almond milk. Almonds are pulverized to an almost impalpable powder, and to this is added the very finest quality of sugar, the mixture then being diluted to drinking consistency. Though it is a national drink and you can secure it at nearly every cafe of the better class, its proper preparation involves great nicety and care. My great bellied friend, in a little box not ten feet square, opposite the Plaza de Armas, is the prince of horchata makers in Cuba.

A tramp came out from Spain to get rich in Havana, so he could return to his country and command an estate and title. He hired a tramp in Cuba and and opened his dingy little stall. But the Spanish tramp knew how to brew divine horchata. He ate with the Chinese, slept on the floor, sold his nectar faster than he could make it—for he thought he preserved his secret even from his helper by locking himself in and the public out at any hour of the day when another brewing of horchata was needed—until his swiftly accruing riches drove him mad and he suddenly disappeared. The calm, rotund Cuban tramp took his place the next day. For some reason he has never had even one helper. So the story goes with a shrug. But the money-changers of the quarter that crowd each other in shops of the same size and dinginess, where Mercedares and Obispo streets come down to the plaza, whisper to you that he who remained in the diggy little stail, and who serves himself and the public without a helper, is clearing $8,000 each year in gold.—Elgar L. Wakeman in Chicago News.

Australia's System of Land Titles.

"The Australian system of fixing titles is perhaps the simplest," said Robert C. Givins, who is accounted one of the most successful real estate lawyers in the city. "A registrar appointed by the government gives certificates of title upon application, and these certificates are marketable. A similar system prevails in Canada, where there are no abstract books. Copies of all deeds are kept on file in the registrar's office, and entries of mortgages or releases are made upon the duplicate at the same time an entry is made upon the original. A perfect title is thus obtainable in a day at the farthest. I doubt, however, whether such a scheme would answer here where transfers are so frequent. We have to depend upon the books in the possession of the abstract firms, which are the only complete ones extant. In fact, they are so correct that almost every large subdivision is in tolerably good shape. We all feel that something should be done to expedite the making of abstracts, but the whole question is so much in embryo that it is hard to point out a

My Lady's Artistic Back-Scratch.

Happening one day in my lady's boudoir I picked up from the cabinet what I took for a pretty bit of bric-a-brac. It was an ebony stem, about fourteen inches long, not thicker than one's finger and quite daintly turned. At one end was attached a pretty little hand deftly wrought in ivory. It could not be called a fist, for I noticed that the fingers were only half closed. The nails were well developed, and their ends or edges were set in a line. This artistic trifle was called a "back-scratch." My lady's "back-scratch" was for use in that very much out-of-the-way place between the shoulder-blades. This handy implement, though an article of virtu, was in the line of luxury, although the amenities would hardly approve the indulgence before eyes polite.—Popular

TAKE SIMMONS
LIVER REGULATOR
For all Diseases of the
Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Spleen.

This purely vegetable preparation, now so celebrated as a Family Medicine, originated in the South in 1828. It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. Two freight trains collided last week near Middleton, Canada. The trains met on a trestle eighty feet high and went crashing through, making a terrible wreck. The engineers of both trains, one of the firemen and several brakemen were killed.

Last week a man named Henry Atkinson was found dead on top of a hay stack in Mason Valley. He had climbed up on the stack and pulled a gun toward him by the muzzle. The usual result followed; it was discharged and killed him. Deceased was aged about 50 years.

Back From England.

Mr. William Mitchell got back last Monday from a trip to England. He was gone eight months. During his stay in England he traveled much over the country and took care to observe closely. He says that American ideas of politics are spreading rapidly in England. The farmers, merchants and professional classes are pushing the landed gentry and the aristocracy out of the way in politics. He found that among these classes a very large majority are in favor of home rule for Ireland. Mr. Mitchell is well pleased to be back in Inyo county. He already owns a good band of cattle and will give all his time to cattle raising.

Frozen To Death.

A well known character called "Spanish Joe" was found dead in his cabin at Virginia City last Friday. His body was found lying beside his bed on the floor. He lay flat on his stomach with his face in a large tin pan. In the pan lay a hatchet and a bruise on the face indicated that he had fallen against the tool with some force. The body was naked with the exception of a shirt. Deceased was addicted to strong drink and it is supposed that he fell out of bed while intoxicated. The bed showed signs of having been in it, the clothes having been turned town. It was supposed that he had been dead two days when found.

The White Hill representation returned to the mine on Wednesday.

Recent rains have made large washouts on roads leading to Los Angeles. Great delay to trains resulted and much inconvenience to travellers.

One of our most pressing needs is an addition to our stock of marriageable girls. The boys are now in a mood to get married but there are not enough girls here to go around.

The writing of the District Attorney has very much improved of late; he makes as neat letters with a type writing machine as anybody could make. Mr. Forbes' caligraph is of the most improved kind.

Fine brands of cigars, the best made; fine French and other candies; nuts and notions; "Our Taste" hams and imported bacon. Dry goods, clothing, etc. Go and see the stock at the store of L. WOOD.

Mr. C. S. Swan is now at work building a new dwelling house. The structure will stand upon the lot next to the INDEPENDENT office on the south. It will be a good sized dwelling; several applications have already been made to rent it when finished.

Matlack expects to be ready for business in the new shop about the first of February. He has ordered a complete outfit of new tools from San Francisco.

The Supreme Court decision in the case of Turlock Irrigation District has not yet been published. The Pioneer, published within the District, says it don't care a cent whether the Wright bill is declared Constitutional or not as capital stands ready to undertake the construction of the canals in case of the failure of the District.

Nathan B. Sutton was hanged at Oakland last Friday. On September 15, 1886, he shot and killed Alexander Martin. Sutton was aged nearly 59 years and was a native of Warren county, New Jersey. On the scaffold he was calm and self possessed to a remarkable degree. When the drop fell the head of the man was nearly torn from his body.

We have just received from J. C. Groene & Co. their latest song, "Hungry at Somebody's Door," by Charles A. Davies. It is a beautiful song and will become as popular as his last song, "There's no one like Mother to me," which we noticed some months ago. Any one of the songs will be sent only eleven 2 c. stamps. Address J. C. Groene & Co., 30 and 46 Arcade, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Tommy smiles all over these days; Barnes has taken to fancy neckties; Keyes is taking extra care of his mustachos; Dick disdains a plain pipe and won't touch anything but a fragrant Havanna. Clinton, at Cerro Gordo, is said to be sporting patent leather boots and scarf-pins; it is even said that he sleeps with gloves on his hands. All this would seem to indicate that they appreciate the fact that it is leap year.

The City Council of Santa Rosa has instructed the City Attorney to draw up an Ordinance prohibiting dealers from selling cigarettes to boys under sixteen years of age, and also making it a penal offense for youths under that age to smoke them. This is all wrong; the cigarette should not be hindered from doing its good work; it is better for the world that the idiots who will smoke cigarettes should be killed in the greatest possible numbers.

The people of Independence turned out in goodly number to the concert given by the Bishop Creek band. The entertainment was well received, every one present being determined to make the occasion as pleasant as possible for the visitors. The night was one of the coldest of the season otherwise the attendance would have been larger. Mr. Uren, the leader of the band appears to be a very capable instructor and the boys have made good progress under him.

A Mine Accident.

The Bodie Miner of last week says: "Jacob W. Kline, an old and well known Bodie miner, who has latterly been working in the south raise in the 300 level of the Standard Con. mine was instantly killed by a cave of rock from the roof and side of the raise. Archie Graham, who is a timberman in the Standard, had a set of timbers placed in the raise ready for stoping. On entering where the deceased was at work Archie discovered that the excavation was not quite wide enough to admit of the timbers being readily adjusted in place, and called Jacob's attention to the fact. 'Why,' replied Kline, 'I can widen this raise all you wish inside of five minutes;' and gathered up his pick and commenced using it vigorously. He was always noted as a hard worker when on shift. Mr. Graham was so near the unfortunate man as to have his hand measureably on his shoulder, and states that without a moment's warning a huge mass of rock fell and caught Jacob on the head, breaking his neck. The raise was sufficiently acute to permit the debris finding its way to the bottom of the incline. The falling mass at once extinguished the lights and the raise was left in utter darkness. Archie Graham was considerably bruised on a shoulder and thigh by the falling rock. His injuries, however, are nominal and he will be all right in a few days. By considerable hard work Mr. Graham managed to get the body of the deceased to the station level, whence it was brought to the surface and afterward conveyed to C. H. Kelly's undertaking rooms on Main street. The Great Register says the deceased was a native of Pennsylvania aged about forty-two years.

A Prosperous Year.

During the year just ended there was not one sale of property in Inyo county by the Sheriff. There was not a death by violence or accident; there was not a case of burglary or robbery in the county within the year. In the Superior Court there was only one trial for crime of any kind and that ended in the discharge from custody of a man accused of shooting at another. In the Justice's Courts there were very few cases, either civil or criminal, and these were all of a trifling character. At Independence the most serious charge was about stewed chicken, or whether the chicken should be stewed or made into tomales. It is thought that the chicken was made into a tomale and that the Justice ate it. During the year a large part of the public land in Owens Valley was located and canals are now in construction for its reclamation. A good part of the land will be supplied with water in time for use the coming spring. At Independence more goods have been sold by merchants and hotels have done better business than in many previous years. Two new school houses have been built in the valley during the year. Altogether 1887 was a prosperous year for Inyo and bright with promise of future prosperity.

New Postal Order.

Much bitter complaint is being made all over the country about the mail service. Recently the Postal Department issued an order that the postal clerks on trains will no longer be allowed to cancel stamps, and that all letters deposited with such clerks will be dropped at the next office—thus delaying them at least one day. The only persons who can be benefited by this order are the postmasters, who will get a percentage for cancelling stamps, while great inconvenience, and even serious loss to many may ensue from delayed correspondence.

Wedding.

Last Tuesday evening there was a wedding at Benton Station. Mr. Nelson J. Buckland, of Dayton, Nevada, and Miss Eden L. Mitchell, daughter of the station agent at Benton, were united in marriage by the Rev. T. E. Sisson, of Independence. A large party attended the wedding, which was a very pleasant affair. The young couple have gone on a trip to San Francisco and on their return will make their home at Dayton.

Stay With It

A party of miners in Colorado have lost a fortune by not holding on a little longer. In the hidden Treasure mine, Georgetown, Colorado, lessees threw up the contract when within seven feet of a vein assaying as follows: First assay 251 ounces silver, 1,185 ounces gold, $24,834 42; second assay, 34 ounces silver, 104 ounces gold, $2,182 66 cents; third class, being merely the country rock, 11 ounces silver, 9 ounces gold, $196 70.

Glanders is prevalent among horses in Mason Valley, Nevada. The Dayton Times says that T. B. Smith has lost thirteen head.

Senator Stewart, of Nevada, strongly favors the confirmation of Lamar as a Justice of the Supreme Court. The opposition to the appointment rests upon the fact that Lamar was a rebel. Since the close of the war Mr. Lamar has given abundant proof of his loyalty to the government and and constitution. If error cannot be atoned for by the most sincere repentance then only one who ever bore the human form could enter heaven. If Mr. Lamar has the necessary knowledge of law to qualify him for the Supreme bench he should be confirmed; no one, not even his bitterest opponent will deny that his decisions will be just and according to the law as he understands it. There need be quite as little doubt that he would attempt to nullify any part of the constitution as it now stands.

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.

EVANS, Stoutland, Mo., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take so much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house, if they had to take the feathers from under their sick and babies to pay for it."
JOHN R. DODGE, JR., jeweler, Normal, Ill., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. Ist. It is the best machine ever invented by man. 2d. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. 3d. If you run short, you can not buy ours for $1000."

THE OPIUM HABIT.

The Most Abject of Slaveries—Is There Any Emancipator?

The New York papers lately published a very pathetic story about a very popular emotional actress. It was to the effect that she had become a confirmed victim of the opium habit, involving an almost total loss of physical and mental powers, and actual destitution.

The story was at once denied by her friends, who say she has suffered simply from nervous prostration, is in no need of pecuniary aid, and is on the way to speedy recovery.

Opium victims are usually hopeless, helpless slaves, mind weakened, lacking energy for any effort toward recovery, rapidly dritting into imbecility and untimely graves.

A peculiar feature is that victims craftily conceal it from their nearest friends. A young lady at school near Philadelphia was recently found to be secretly addicted to it, keeping her "medicine" in a school-room inkstand, and injecting the fluid into her arm with a stylographic pen!

In the Chicago Farm Field and Stockman, September 24, 1887, is this letter signed S. T. O., from Barstow, Ky.: "I missed the paper that had my letter in, so I did not know that you made the request to know what it was I used to break up the morphine habit, until I got a letter from a gentleman asking information. I should have answered sooner. It was Warner's safe cure. I should have given it when I wrote the letter, but it looked too much like an advertisement."

This voluntary statement goes to confirm the claim made by the proprietors of Warner's safe cure, that it is the only remedy in the world which has any decided power over diseases of the kidneys and liver, and that this terrible habit cannot be cured until these organs have first been restored to full health, because they are the ones chiefly affected by this drug.

Editor Wm. A. Bode, of Alton, Ill., was completely cured of the opium habit, acquired by long use in a painful malady, with Warner's safe cure. It cannot be cured at all if the kidneys and liver are diseased.

It is not claimed that there is anything in Warner's safe cure alone which will do away with the habit, except that it puts the kidneys and liver in a healthy condition, giving the whole system that strength and tone without which any attempt to throw off the habit, would be vain.

It is because physicians have discovered that no other remedy is so beneficial in restoring health to the liver, kidneys and general system as the one stated that it has come into general use in connection with the special remedies for the cure of the dreadful opium habit.

One of the worst features of the opium habit is the deadening of mental and moral sensibilities in proportion as it weakens the physical system and the will power.

Time for Action.

Domestic—Please, mam, your pug dog got under the street car and got killed.

Young Wife—Indeed?

"Yes, mam; an' the new girl has ruined your best dress a littin' it fall into the grease kettle."

"How careless!"

"And thieves has got in an' run off with your diamonds."

"We must keep the front door locked in future."

"An' please, mam, a man says your husband's fine property down town is burning."

"Hark! What's that?"

"I didn't hear anything."

"My gracious! The baby's crying; run to him, quick."—Omaha World.

Easily Managed.

Agent (showing a Harlem flat)—And this, madam, is the servants' room.

Madam (dubiously)—Rather small for my girl. She's 5 feet 10.

Agent—Oh, there will be no trouble about that, madam, I assure you. The family who last occupied the flat employed a girl 6 feet tall.

Madam—How did she manage it?

Agent—She let her feet hang out in the hall.—The Epoch.

Popular Song.

"But the letter that he longed for never came."—Life.

Righteously Indignant.

Young Jinks—Why are you not at work?

Young Blinks—My employer discharged me this morning; but that isn't the worst of it.

"Eh?"

"He actually kicked me out of the place—kicked me out, sir."

"Well, what are you going to do?"

"I shall send in my resignation at once."—Omaha World.

The Czar Spoke English.

The late Maj. Mordecai, of North Carolina, met the czar of Russia once, and in the course of the conversation, which was carried on in French, addressed him as "Monsieur." Turning to Gen. McClellan, the major said: "D—n the fellow, I called him mister." The czar, with a smile, remarked: "Let us talk English, we can get along better." The North Carolinian didn't cuss the czar any more during that interview.—Atlanta Constitution.

A Distressing Predicament.

Conductor (after the accident)—Well, sir, we have at last found your valet, but, sad to say, he's cut in two.

English Tourist—Aw, vewy distressing! Sorry to trouble you, dontcherknow, but I've never traveled in this country before; would you see in which half is the key of my trunk.—Life.

A Lost Lesson in Etiquette.

Miss Struckoyle (in a whisper)—Don't place your napkin under your chin, papa.

Pater Struckoyle (in a growl)—Good Lord child! You don't expect me to eat soup with the back of my neck, do you?—The Judge.

THE POLICE RIDDEN GERMANS.

Everything in a Teutonic City Is Kept Strictly Under Police Supervision.

At the time when the universal cry in England is for more laws, more legislation, fresh restrictions in every direction, it is well to turn one's eyes to a country where a paternal government hedges round its submissive subjects with every possible safeguard, and decide whether, on the whole, people are better off there than they are with us. Germany under the Bismarckian system offers a good field for study; it matters little whether we go to Prussia or to one of the minor kingdoms, for the chancellor's iron hand is to be felt on every side. The first point that will strike an Englishman on taking up his residence in a German town—let us say in Munich, which in all respects is a fair type of the sleepy, beer drinking, easy going Teutonic city—is that the word "polizei" meets him at every turn. Whatever he may wish to know, if it is only the address of a friend, he must apply to the police; whatever he may wish to do and cannot he is told is "polizeilich verboten" (forbidden by the police).

The ordinary law abiding Englishman, when at home, has no reason for coming in contact with the police from one year to another, and probably lives in sublime ignorance of the whereabouts of the nearest police station. Not so in Germany. Within three days of his arrival he is expected to call at the police offices and fill up a form stating his name, age, profession and religion, whether he is married, single or divorced, the object of his visit and how long he means to remain. Nor is it only foreigners who are treated in this inquisitorial manner. Every person who changes his place of residence must give immediate notice thereof to the authorities; every servant girl who goes to a new situation must notify the fact to the police, and allow her service book—also a compulsory institution—to be supervised. Every dog must be taken to the police station, medically examined, its address entered, and be provided with a metal label to be worn on the collar. It is "polizeilich verboten" to have music in your house after 10 o'clock without the consent of all the other tenants; to take a lighted candle in your own loft; to put flower pots on your own window sill; to sell strong beer after holiday. Every chimney must be swept by order of the government once a month (the sweep usually arriving for the operation in the middle of the afternoon) and periodic visits are paid by officials into every room to see that the careless householder does not stand his own furniture too close to the stove, thereby running the risk of a possible fire.

The whole drainage system, wretched and unsanitary as it is, is under the supervision of the police. Needless to say that the hours for opening and closing shops and restaurants are all fixed by law, and, by a peculiar stroke of one sided tyranny, the tram cars are not allowed to run after 9 p. m., as they would otherwise interfere with the cab monopoly. The infraction of any of these rules is punished by strictly enforced fines, nor must it be imagined that the officials facilitate conformance to the law. Everything is left to the initiative of the citizen, and the regulations as to the days, hours and place of registration, etc., are so numerous, and so constantly changed, that the inexperienced foreigner may frequently make several weary journeys before red tapeism declares itself satisfied.

It is not for a moment disputed that the majority of the regulations are distinctly beneficial to the general community. It is far better to insist on properly fixed flower boxes than that the unsuspecting pedestrian should receive a flower pot on his head. It is most reassuring to lodging house keepers that they cannot unwittingly receive a notorious scoundrel without the police immediately warning them of the fact. It is quite true, moreover, that the dog regulations have been absolutely effectual in stamping out hydrophobia. Prince Bismarck is a judicious despot, and in the eyes of those who look merely to immediate results a most beneficent ruler.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Diet Treatment of Obesity.

M. Dujardin-Beaumetz, one of the most eminent of living French physicians, prescribes the following dietary for the reduction of obesity: "Breakfast at 8 o'clock—Two ounces of cold meat, an ounce of bread, eight ounces of weak tea without sugar. Luncheon at noon—Two ounces of bread, four ounces of meat or stew or two eggs, four ounces of fresh vegetables, half an ounce of cheese, fruit ad libitum. Dinner at 7 o'clock—No soup, two ounces of bread, four ounces of meat or stew, four ounces of fresh vegetables, salad, half an ounce of cheese, fruit ad libitum. In conjunction with this course purgatives should be taken rather frequently, either mineral waters, pills or powders, and the subject should take exercise in proportion to his strength and employ massage."—Chicago News.

The Song of Birds.

To a certain extent we may take the sounds uttered by birds and animals as an index to their emotional condition. If you hear a man humming an air as he walks along, you conclude either that he is a lunatic or that he is happy. Spontaneous song, whether of birds, animals or man, is possible only when the singer is cheerful. A pianist may of deliberate purpose play a set piece, but he will never successfully improvise when he is miserable. The song of our hedge warblers, though it of course contains inherited elements, is essentially an improvisation; it is by no means necessary to their existence or their perpetuation. Developed at first as an adjunct to sexual selection, it has been extended as the highest exponent of pleasure of all kinds. It begins each year in the breeding season, but it is by no means confined to that season.—Nineteenth Century.

House Decorating Business.

A young New Orleans woman is preparing to go into the house decorating business, and this fall will offer her services for graining woodwork, for wall and ceiling painting, and for decorating fireplaces. This artist recently painted a wistaria vine in full blossom around the frame of a bedroom door. The vine sprang from the molding of the wall and clambered up the jamb, showing delicate tendrils and clusters of bloom on both woodwork and wall.—New Orleans Picayune.

A Very Rare Shell.

A very rare shell, the Conus gloria maris, was recently found in a house in Cebu, Philippine Islands, by Mr. Mollendorf, German consul at Manila. Its home is in deep water, and only a severe typhoon drives it on shore. It is said that there are only two similar specimens in existence—one in the Royal museum in London and the other in Paris. The new specimen goes to the Berlin museum.—Harper's Bazar.

Tribulations of an Understudy.

"Pity the sorrows of a poor young understudy."

The speaker was a pretty little lady beyond the early caramel age, but not yet graduated from the chewing gum habit. A coquettish hat, surmounted by a combination of silk and feathers that pierced the innocent atmosphere a foot or more above her head, set off her smooth features and sub rosa chin to advantage. A tight fitting suit gave her a jaunty air, and, taken all in all, she was just such an attractive miss as a man would be willing to stop and talk to, all unmindful of the fact that his wife was keeping supper and temper warm for him at home.

"Yes," she continued, "I am an understudy for a 'star' of the one night stand variety, and if you think the position a bed of roses just conclude that you are mistaken without any unnecessary delay. In the first place one can build up no reputation. She plays under the name of the star, and, stopping but one night in a town, no one is the wiser. The printing is all done early in the season, and when those in the audience observe that the distinguished actress, Miss So-So, is to play "Cora" or "Camille," how are they to know it really is Miss So-So who appears on the stage? They can't do it, you know. Well, I was obliged to play for our 'star' five or six straight weeks last winter on account of sickness that kept her away from the company, and not a single auditor ever knew the difference. The newspapers gave me splendid notices in the name of the absent actress, though if they had known that I was an understudy, it is probable that they would have treated me with toplofty scorn. That shows how much real appreciation there is for art on its own merits. I have reason to believe that my work was fully as good as that of the star herself, and yet here I am at the end of the season without a particle of reputation, while all that I have suffered in mind, body and estate would fill a book. Now you know something about the tribulations of an understudy, enough, I hope, to warrant you in dropping an occasional journalistic tear in our behalf."—Chicago Herald.

Boating with Garfield.

A grizzled, weary looking toiler of the towpath sat in Superintendent McKenna's office the other afternoon. He had just come down from the west, and found himself compelled temporarily to give up work on account of a sore foot, which left him almost unable to walk. To a reporter he told how, when he was a boy of 10 and the lamented James A. Garfield was a youth of 15, they plodded side by side along the Wabash canal and slept in the same bunk, both being employed on the boat Reaper Williard.

The boatman's name is George McAuley. He told how studiously young Garfield was even at that early day, and how, even when seated astride of a horse, he always was poring over a book. He was a general favorite all along the canal, said McAuley, as he was invariably courteous and never used a coarse or an unkind word to any one. He was paid $15 a month, which was considered large wages in those days. For two summers he followed the canal, and McAuley saw him no more until the war broke out and he joined the army, when one day, as he was doing picket duty, Garfield, who was then wearing a general's uniform, approached him and recognized in him the companion of his humble days. Soon after McAuley was taken prisoner and sent to Libby prison, and after his release took up his old life on the canal. He never saw Garfield again.—Albany Express.

Fish as a Brain Food.

Fish as brain food has so long been an established and renovated theory that Professor Atwater, who seems to wholly shatter the cherished belief in his disquisition upon the subject in The Century, will probably be regarded as a ruthless iconoclast. Concluding his demonstration of the conclusion drawn, he says that even if fish were richer in phosphorus than meats or other food materials, this would not establish its superiority for the nutrition of the brain or the production of intellectual energy. But there is no proof of any especial abundance of phosphorus in fish. On the contrary, an extended series of analyses in this laboratory have revealed proportions of phosphorus in the flesh of our ordinary food, fishes differing in no important degree from those which have been found to occur in the flesh of the other animals used for the food of man.

Continuing he adds that "studies of the constitution of the flesh of fish in this laboratory, referred to above, as well as similar investigations elsewhere, show that, so far as the nutritive qualities are concerned, the only considerable difference between fish and ordinary meats is in the proportion of oily and fatty matters and water. The flesh of the fish has water where meats have fat."—New York Market Journal.

The Lobster's Claw.

When the lobster was given to me he was without his left big claw, which had, I suppose, been accidentally wrenched off by his original captor. The stump very quickly healed up, a hard calcareous seal incrusting the end of the joint. To my astonishment, when the lobster worked himself out of his old shell he appeared with a rudimentary left claw which had evidently formed behind the shield. This claw grew even more rapidly than the rest of the body; and by the time the new shell was hard, the new claw, though still disproportionate, was of very serviceable dimensions. I do not believe that the loss of a claw is a matter of much more moment to a lobster than it is to a crab. Sometimes, indeed, both lobsters and crabs appear to dismember themselves voluntarily. I have known a lobster to get one of his paws hopelessly wedged in between the withes of a lobster pot and leave it there in the most nonchalant manner imaginable.—St. James' Gazette.

In High Organ Lofts.

I am at a loss to know why choir galleries are built above the audience seats. Two reasons I should think would operate to make the reverse true. The air is worse the nearer you get to the ceiling, and sound goes up rather than down. Especially do I wonder at it in Catholic churches, where the singing is such a prominent feature. Why all churches want to have their singers get the bad air is something I cannot understand. It is really painful to sit in the high organ lofts in the hot, breathed air sent up by the audience, and when it comes to singing, why it is like trying to lift yourself by your bootstraps—you've nothing to work on. I am surprised that the singers do not take a more active interest in this matter and agitate for a reform.—"Musician" in Globe-Democrat.

The south is drawing largely from northern capital. It is said over $160,000,000 of capital has gone south within the last year.

Rich Tunisian Jewesses.

The opening of the Suez Canal has made its mark on Malta. It being a great port of entry as well as a coaling station, foreigners from all parts of the East make it a rendezvous. Of a fine evening can be seen Turks, Greeks, Armenians, Persians, East Indian nabobs, and many other nationalities. The most picturesque costumes were those of some Tunisian women (Jewesses), dressed in a fabric of fine striped silk of various colors, bound from the ankles—each leg separate to the waist; then a sort of vest, with sleeves of the same material. In place of a bonnet, a species of skull-cap was worn. They had fled from Tunis, as they were immensely wealthy, and attempts had been made to carry some of them off into captivity for the sake of a big ransom. Some time after their arrival many of those ladies assumed the European dress, and they were really a nice looking class of women, who would make many a Saratoga belle blush with envy. The males, as a class, were a fine, noble-looking lot of men—who wore the Turkish dress, including the fez.—Malta Letter.

—"Why, Georgy," said a girl to her little brother, "I've just heard that you were whipped at school last week. I had no idea of it till I was told it a few minutes ago." "Hadn't you?" responded Georgy; and then he added, with a tone and air of pride: "Wh-, I knew it at the time."—N. Y. Ledger.

The Almanac has been issued regularly at the commencement of every year for over one-fifth of a century. It combines, with the soundest practical advice for the preservation and restoration of health, a large amount of interesting and amusing light reading, and the calendar, astronomical calculations, chronological items, etc., are prepared with great care, and will be found entirely accurate. The issue of Hostetter's Almanac for 1888 will probably be the largest edition of a medical work ever published in any country. The proprietors, Messrs. Hostetter & Co., Pittsburg, Pa., on receipt of a two-cent stamp, will forward a copy by mail to any person who cannot procure one in his neighborhood.

"BLOOD WILL TELL."

Yes, the old adage is right, but if the liver is disordered and the blood becomes thereby corrupted, the bad "blood will tell" in diseases of the skin and throat, in tumors and ulcers, and in tubercles in the lungs (first stages of consumption) even although the subject be descended in a straight line from Richard Cœur de Lion, or the noblest Roman of them all. For setting the liver in order no other medicine in the world equals Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Try it, and your "blood will tell" the story of its wonderful efficacy.

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. PIERCE thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have sallow color of skin, or yellowish-brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills, alternating with hot flushes, low spirits and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and coated tongue, you are suffering from Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and Torpid Liver, or "Biliousness." In many cases only part of these symptoms are experienced. As a remedy for all such cases, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is unsurpassed.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

STORIES ABOUT MEN.

Bits of Human Nature Taken From Greatness.

Among the remarks addressed by the famous Justice Duffy, of New York, recently to prisoners before him and to persons asking the release of prisoners, The Sun recalls these:

To a boy—You are an incorrigible boy, you villain, you swashbuckler, you bandit, you bravo. I shall have to send you up for seventeen years. Officer, put him in a cell with rats, big muskrats. Give him bread and water for six years. How old will he be when he comes out?

(Aside)—Let him go in an hour.

To an intoxicated woman—You say you are married. You are married to whisky. Six months.

To a fighter—You are a ranger. You knock down and drag out people. Your face gives you away. I give you ten days. If you come here again I will give you ten years.

To a rounder—You are an Irish bum. You have not washed yourself in two years.

To the audience—Any of you women out there who have pots and pans and children to take care of had better go home. I am tired of looking at you out there. Go home.

A Witty German Journalist.

Moritz Gotlieb Saphir, a Jewish journalist, is regarded as the foremost wit and humorist of the German speaking people. Many examples are cited of his readiness in retort.

While living at Munich he incurred the displeasure of King Ludwig by criticising the royal author's party. An opportunity subsequently offered for expelling the offending journalist from the Bavarian capital, and he was ordered to leave within four and twenty hours. The court chamberlain, commissioned by the king, waited on him and asked if he could manage to get away in so short a time. "Yes," replied the unabashed journalist, "and if my own legs can't take me quick enough I'll borrow some of the superfluous feet in her majesty's last volume of verse."

When introduced for the first time to the prompter of the Leipsiger Stadt theater, a pompous personage too much in evidence at times, Saphir remarked: "I heard a good deal of you, Herr A——"—the prompter bowed his acknowledgments of the expected compliment, while the wit added—"in the course of a performance last evening."

Driving out in the suburbs of Vienna one day, his coachman, a peppery miethkutscher, got into an altercation with a rival Jehu. Words soon led to oaths, and oaths to blows, and the pair set to in good earnest to decide which was the better man. Popping his head out of the fiacre window, Saphir mildly implored the pair to oblige him and drub each other as quickly as they could, for he had "engaged the carriage by the hour."

A young couple, newly engaged, were favored with a letter of introduction to him, which they duly presented. Now, the gentleman was notorious for his effeminate habits and ways, and his appearance at once struck the eye of the observant journalist, who had heard about him. He said nothing, received the pair with empressement, insisted upon their being seated in his most comfortable easy chairs, assured them how pleased he was to hear of their engagement, and wound up with: "Now, pray, you must, you really must, tell me which of you is the bride."

He once described a theatre as being so full that people were obliged to laugh perpendicularly, there was no room to do so horizontally. Of a dull townlet he visited, he remarked it was so quiet that but for an occasional death there would really be no life in the place.—New York Sun.

It Pleased a Man From St. Louis.

Since Mashall Field moved into his great new store Market street has in some respects degenerated. It is a fact that there are a few tufts of grass growing in front of the big red building in which two fortunes have been made. Perhaps these are the only grass blades to be found in the streets of Chicago. They are growing, too, directly under the window at which the Western merchant prince used to sit and watch his many wagons and trucks driving hither and yon. To the patriotic Chicagoan this sign of the decadence of a once busy district is not pleasant. Not so, however, with a St. Louis man who came to Chicago several weeks ago. He knew no one in the city, and his heart yearned for the quiet of his native town. While wandering nimlessly about the city the other day, he happened to pass the little tuft of grass which crept up between the stones on Market street. He stopped, gazed at it attentively, and then sat down upon an empty dry goods box, while a smile illumined his face.

"Colonel," said he to a man who was washing one of the windows in the big warehouse, "that tuft of grass is like an oasis in the desert. It reminds me of St. Louis, and I want to sit here and look at it. It's the most homelike thing I've seen since I've been in Chicago."—Chicago Herald.

Citizen Train's Omaha Hotel.

I was stopping at the Herndon house, now the Union Pacific headquarters. With me, as guests, were James Brooks and a dozen congressmen. We went down to breakfast, and during that early meal a window pane was broken, and one of those wild, bleak, bitter Nebraska winds whistled through the hirsute appendages—this expression was not in vogue in those days—of the guests. The proprietor never made any effort to fix the defective window. It was genius on my part—a brilliant idea, I thought—when I called to an Ethiopian to brace himself up against the hole and stop the breeze. I didn't fancy such a hotel and immediately went out and purchased the ground where the Cozzens house now stands. I also went to a contractor and asked him if he ever erected a building larger than a chicken coop. I had him construct the hotel in sixty days. I afterward rented it to Cozzens, of New York, who took the management of it and paid me a rental of $10,000 a year for it.—Interview in Omaha World.

A Russian Prince's Practical Joke.

Rosa Bonheur, the artist, was one evening placed at dinner next to the Grand Duke Michael, cousin of the present Czar. The two got on very well, and even ate a vielliebchen together after dinner. Owing to the pressure of business the Russian visitor forgot the joke and lost the bet. On asking Mme. Bonheur what he might offer her as a forfeit, she said jestingly, "Any pretty little animal I might use as a model." For some time after the grand duke went away nothing was heard of him, and the artist had forgotton the affair, when only a few days ago the forfeit arrived in the shape of three gigantic white bears.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Good Story About Lincoln.

President Lincoln said once that the best story he ever read in the papers of himself was this: Two Quakeresses were traveling on the railroad, and were heard discussing the probable termination of the war. "I think," said the first, "that Jefferson will succeed." "Why does thee think so?" asked the other. "Because Jefferson is a praying man," "And so is Abraham a praying man," objected the second. "Yes, but the Lord will think Abraham is joking," the first replied, conclusively.—Boston Budget.

BAHAMA TREASURES.

Interesting Experiences of a Scientific Party from Pennsylvania.

The little party of biologists sent out by the University of Pennsylvania to make investigations and researches have returned with abundance of glory and several boxes, tubs and tanks full of curious specimens. The primary purpose of the jaunt was to give the party an opportunity to determine upon the Bahamas as the site of a biological marine station that the university desires to establish and hopes to have in existence within three years. It already has a considerable fund for that purpose.

The residence of the party during their stay was at a comfortable house three miles from Nassau, almost on the water's edge. They lived in community, each member taking charge of the men in turn. The cost was extremely modest. The men went to work at once, taking advantage of such assistance as the people roundabout could afford. A young boatman and diver named Brown was found to be of great use, having already served three distinguished naturalists—Prof. Gardner, who was sent out by the English Government; Prof. Welden, of Cambridge, and Prof. Brooks, of John Hopkins.

All the party were good swimmers, and soon learned to do their own diving. Each provided himself with a crowbar and a water box, a small box with a plate-glass bottom. The glass, quieting the ripples on the surface of the sea, enabled them to see far down into the depths, many times to the very bottom. When any one saw a bit of rock-bearing coral, anemones, sponges, or other objects that he wished to secure he tossed the glass aside, dived down, and pried the desired specimen loose with the crowbar and carried it up under his arm. Practice enabled them to stay a long time under water. Mr. Marshall frequently remained two minutes submerged. Dr. Dolleys says that any man can remain under water a considerable time if he will only simply make up his mind to do so. There is an intense feeling of oppression at first, but Dr. Dolley says that it is simply nervousness, and soon passes away.

Several medicinal plants were secured and experiments will be made as to their therapeutic value. Among them is a curious bean that animals are very fond of eating. At first the animals grow fat and sleek. But in about two weeks their tails and manes drop off; in another week their hoofs and horns, if they have horns, go. Then they grow weaker and weaker and finally die of fatty degeneration. But even to the end they eat the beans with infinite relish. There are other plants in the collection that are used by the natives in the treatment of rheumatism and dysentery with apparent success. The doctors are "bushmen," who have learned the medicinal qualities of herbs and roots and trees by tradition. Governor Blake, for the party, sailed to the island of Alaco one day and settled the question as to whether flamingos sit in or stand over their nests, a question about which naturalists have been in dispute these many years. Dr. Dolley says Governor Blake reported that flamingos sit in their nests like other birds. The party went swimming at night in a wonderful phosphorescent lake. At every stroke the swimmers created waves of fire, and when they climbed out upon their boat their bodies seemed covered with myriads of flaming sparks. The "sparks," of course, were myriads of copepods, the little glowing creatures that give the appearance of fire to the surface of the lake.

Some skulls of the Luycayans, the original inhabitants of the islands, who were exterminated within thirty years after their discovery by Columbus, were found in a cave.—Philadelphia Times.

Royal Recreation.

King Otto of Bavaria, whose mental condition is really pitiable, has now taken to peeling potatoes for a pastime. At last accounts he claimed to have a contract to peel all the potatoes used in the Munich hotels. It is so rare that a monarch takes a whim in the direction of useful labor that we are constrained at this moment to regard Otto as the most useful divine-right potentate in Europe. When the Czar of Russia takes to sawing wood and the Emperor of Austria learns the shoemaking trade we shall hold that the European end of civilization is moving upward in the scale.—N. Y. World.

A Gentle Hint.

Omaha Husband—The theatre will be half over before we get started.

Young Wife—Well, I can't get these gloves buttoned.

"Don't see why you should be slow and awkward about a common thing like that."

"I never had a chance to practice before."

"Nonsense. Never had a chance to practice?"

"No, there were always plenty of young men around to do that for me, you know, dear."—Omaha World.

A Negro Uprising in Pittsburg.

"There was a negro uprising on Wylie street this morning," remarked the judge.

"Was there?" asked the major.

"Yes, at least I suppose there was, for as I came down I heard a colored woman scream: 'Yo thar, George Washington Snow, ef you don't git right up yo won't git no breffus.'"—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Not Governed by the Same Rules.

House Owner—How many children have you, madam?

House Hunter—Five.

House Owner—That alters the case. I can't let you have the house.

House Hunter—You are more particular and exclusive, sir, than the kingdom of heaven.

House Owner—Possibly, madam, possibly. This house fronts on Prairie avenue. Good night.—Chicago Tribune.

SORGHUM FOR FOOD.

A Kansas Farmer's Gratifying Experience With This Crop.

To raise a successful crop of sorghum prepare good ground as you would for a good crop of corn; if your soil is fertile it will produce more, if thin less. Before sowing test your seed that you may know what proportion of it will grow. On strong soil sow at least a bushel of clean seed per acre; if the soil is poor three pecks of seed will be sufficient. You may sow your sorghum seed broad-cast or drill it in as you choose. It should be covered about the depth of wheat, and in this climate sown from the 1st to the 20th of May, or immediately after corn planting. The amber cane, on account of its early maturity, is perhaps preferable. Having sown good seed the crop will soon appear occupying all the ground and smothering out the weeds. After the crop has got a foot high so as to shade the ground it will mature without further rain. When the head begins to show here and there, over the field, it should be cut either with an ordinary mowing machine, or with a harvester, leaving it, in case the weather is dry, in piles or binding it in small bundles. If the crop is cut by an ordinary mowing machine it will be ready to rake into winrows in four to six days, varying in proportion to the rankness of the crop. On good soil the crop should grow from five to seven feet. After standing in the winrows four or five days it will probably be ready to place in your barn, or stack as you choose. Should your sorghum get wet while cutting it does not hurt it much, but it should be dry when put into stack or mow, otherwise it will mold. If you have followed the above directions in sowing, cutting and curing your crop you will find that you have from five to eight tons per acre of most excellent and nutritious food acceptable to any and all heifers or animals, especially adapted to promote an abundant flow of sweet milk from our dairy cows, and with a little middlings or Indian meal added will keep them in excellent health. Some three years ago last November I put in stable twelve head of "strippers," directing my man to feed them what rough food they would eat, and in addition to give each cow about one quart of corn-meal and three quarts of wheat bran morning and evening. This he did, but as my sorghum fodder was covered by several tons of prairie hay, he had to first feed that to them. Notwithstanding this hay was bright and sweet these cows fell off in their milk very much, but when reaching the sorghum they commenced to gain again, and many of them continued a free flow of milk up to near calving time. Since then a similar experience has been repeated nearly every winter. The seed of sorghum, though nutritious, will dry up milk cows if fed to them, and for this reason and also because the stalk, if permitted to mature, becomes tough and woody, the crop should always be cut before the seed has formed. In this latitude two crops of sorghum can be secured every season, the second crop not yielding quite as much but in quality quite as good as the first, or if you prefer, you may secure two months or more of good late pasture before frost in place of the second crop. In either case this crop is very profitable to the stockman. In conclusion I desire to say that my sorghum crop has always been reliable, notwithstanding heat, drought and insects, giving me uniformly good crops even on fresh broken sod. Try it yourself and be convinced.—H. A. Ensign, in Dairy World.

THE PEANUT TRADE.

How the Nuts Are Prepared and Assorted for the Market.

In Virginia they are called peanuts; in North Carolina, ground peas; in South Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi, pinders; in Alabama, groundnuts, and in Tennessee, goobers.

The preparation of peanuts for the market is an interesting operation. They are first put into an immense cylinder, from which they enter the brushes, where each nut receives fifteen or sixteen feet of brushing before it becomes free. After this cleansing process the nut drops on an endless belt, which revolves very slowly. On each side of the belt is a row of girls, whose duty it is to separate the poor nuts from the good ones. Those of the nuts that pass go on to the next room, where more girls await their arrival and put them in bags, which, when filled, are sewed up and properly branded. These are the "No. 1" peanuts. The poorer nuts, which are separated by the girls at the endless belt, are all picked over again; the best are singled out and branded, after being put in the sack, as "ships." The "ships" are not so large nor so fine in appearance as the No. 1's, but are just as good for eating. The third grade of nuts is known as "eagles," and the cullings that are left from the eagles are bagged and sent to a building where the little meat that is in them is extracted by means of a patent sheller.

This "meat"—for by this name it is known to the dealers—is put up, clean and nice, in two hundred-pound bags, and shipped for the use of confectioners and manufacturers of peanut candy. There is also an oil made from some of the nuts, and in this specialty a large trade is done by wholesale druggists. Of the peanut nothing is wasted, for even the shells are made useful, being put in immense sacks and sold to liverymen for horse-bedding. And a very comfortable, healthy bed they make.—Golden Days.

—The Somerville (Mass.) Journal says the trouble with a great many editors is that they don't think one-half as much as they write.

DEACON BURDETTE.

His Talk Out of Church on Current Topics.

DELIVER US FROM RICHES.

"Great possessions may bring great misfortunes." The wise man is sometimes correct. Only six months ago a man in Ohio was left a fortune of $700,000 by the death of his father. And already his brothers, sisters and cousins have gone into court and proved that the man's father had three wives at one time, that he died head and ears in debt to all his relatives, that his fortune was dishonestly obtained and that he was a defaulter to the government, that he had been violently insane at several periods of his life and was in a condition of hopeless imbecility at the time he made this will, that the man forged this will any how, and that he was not able to take care of such a property in any case, being himself little better than an idiot. He has still a little of the money left, but he leaves it out on the doorstep every night, in the hope that somebody will come along and steal it.

THE WEAK POINT IN THE EVIDENCE.

"At five minutes of 11 o'clock, on the 11th of June, I shall drop dead," said Charles Kirtland, of Piqua, Ohio, eleven years ago. And at five minutes to 11 o'clock on the morning of June 11, 1887, a baker's wagon ran over Charles and broke his leg. "Drop bread," was what Charles meant to say when he struck out in the prophecy business.

HEAVEN LOVES THE HEATHEN.

Favored above all lands are the Isles of Sandwich. In their recent war of the rebellion the entire army only numbered 147 men, so if every soldier under arms, and the sutler in the tent, writes a magazine history of the war, the series of war articles can only run twelve years and four months. And yet some people believe in a second probation for the heathen. Not much; they seem to get their heaven here.

A BEAUTIFUL HEATHEN CUSTOM.

When a Chinaman earnestly presses a visitor to stay to dinner, the visitor is then aware that he is not wanted, and straightway he goes home. In America the invitation to remain to dinner, however cordially phrased, often means just what it does among the lying heathen, but what puzzles the Christian is to know just when it means "stay" and when it means "go." In some respects the heathen hold away over us.

THE TRAMP.

Slow paced, with listless step he moved along,
To where the woodbine mantled all the door,
And tossed its restless shadows on the floor;
His idle breath, escaping in a song,
Bore scents of Old Tom Juniper along;
Upon both feet he limped, as travel sore.
For alms he asked; ate them and asked for more;
And lingered yet, the banquet to prolong,
While I felt envy of his lone and brawn,
And his glad life, so free from toil or care;
And did not know, till after he was gone,
That he had taken with him my best pair
Of summer clothes, and other things, to pawn,
And drifted idly off—we knew not where.

Ah, would that I, like him, might come and go,
As birds and winds and shadows go and come,
Careless of all things sad or burdensome;
Living as idly as fair lilies grow
Beside the dreamy river's slumbrous flow;
At morn, awakened by the hollow drum
Of partridge in the thicket; by the hum
Of over busy bees at noontime's glow,
Lulled to my midday slumber in the wood;
Drone like, to eat the sweets by others stored;
To live with birds and winds in brotherhood,
My fashion plate the clothes line, and my board
The farmer's care—but, ah, it is no good;
I have no luck; I would get caught and scored.

Just as Sis Said.

Mr. De Sickly has called upon Bobby's sister, and is waiting for that young lady to make her appearance. Bobby enters in the meantime.

De Sickly, with a grin—How do do, Bobby? Don't you know me? Come and tell me what's my name.

Bobby—Well, sir, if it ain't just as Sis said, you haven't sense enough to know what your name is. If you'll wait a minute I'll find out for you. I heard pa say he had you on the list, so I guess he must know your name.—Texas Siftings.

Home, Sweet Home.

She (thoughtfully)—George, dear, are there not times in your life when the pathos and truth of that most beautiful of all songs, "Home, sweet home, there is no place like home," appear to you with startling vividness, and fill your soul with longing?

He (a baseball player)—Yes, indeed, particularly when I'm on third base with two men out.—New York Sun.

—A gentleman in St. Louis sold to a dealer a handsome but rather back number bedroom suite. The dealer transformed the set by cutting down the high-top bed and dressing-case to more modern proportions, cleaned it up, varnished it nicely and brought it to the auction rooms. The original owner happened in during the sale, bought the set and was none the wiser until his sharp-eyed wife dispelled the bargain illusion by informing him that he had bought back his furniture at two hundred per cent. profit to the smart dealer.

Somewhat Personal.

A humpback met a malicious one-eyed neighbor.

"Ah," said the latter, "you have your load on your back early this morning."

"Yes," responded the humpback, looking intently at the one-eyed man; "it must be rather early. I see you have only got one blind open."—Texas Siftings.

—Mrs. Yeager—"Matilda, hurry up with those shoes. What keeps you so long?" Matilda—"I'se a-comin', mum. I heard you call the fust time, an' I thought to save time I'd jess button 'em up for you before you puts 'em on."—Texas Siftings.

OF GENERAL INTEREST.

—A junk man at Bushnell found two boys playing with a cast-iron globe about the size of a base ball. It proved to be an unexploded canister bomb.

—A negro at the Boyce (La.) telegraph office the other day sent the following dispatch to an absent friend: "Come home your wifes dyin' fast as she can."

—Two ladies, Miss Belle Burrows and Virginia Springer, each carried out a keg of powder from a burning store during a recent fire at New Martinsville, W. Va. The kegs were hot and they put wet rags on them to cool them.

—Feyth, the Bridgeport safe burglar, says that safes should be set on blocks and placed in a corner in such a position that the door will shut toward the wall. This makes it necessary to move the safe in order to get at the door with the wedge and jimmy, and the job is difficult and dangerous.

—A pretty miss, not over fifteen years of age, set up a bootblacking stand in Wall street, New York, one day recently, and everyone expected to see her get a large custom, but somehow or other no man had the courage to submit his boots to the brushes of a maiden, and she was compelled to give up the business.

—In a recently published history of Connecticut appears a description of a grand wedding in the later colonial days. The historian says: "On the day after the marriage ninety-two ladies and gentlemen proceeded to dance ninety-two jigs, fifty-two contra dances, forty-five minuets, and seventeen hornpipes."

—We are growing old very fast, Horatio, my son. Time is winging us away to our eternal home at a great rate. We have scarcely recovered from the effects of our Fourth of July celebration before we have to make preparations to contract our Christmas headache. This is a mad, mad world.—Lincoln Journal.

—A farmer of Mecklenburg County, N. C., owns a tame crow which goes regularly to the cotton field and picks as much in a day as any of the human pickers. With its beak it twists the cotton out and puts it in a bag. The owner of this truly rare bird, as well as the neighbors, declare that the statement is true in all respects.

—A negro in Americus, Ga., bought a trunk at a store for one dollar and a half. An hour afterward he returned and said he guessed he'd got too much for his money. The trunk was filled with the storekeeper's stock of Mackinaw straw hats that had been packed away in it for the winter. They were worth from seventy-five to one hundred dollars.

—Mrs. Jennie Webster, of 1009 Chestnut street, St. Louis, found a man under her bed one evening recently. In the absence of her husband she was perusing some old love letters, the package fell to the floor, and in recovering it she discovered the intruder's feet. She quietly left the room, summoned an officer, and the would-be burglar was captured. Mrs. Webster then swooned in the most approved fashion.

—Engineer William Dart, of the steam tug U. Dart at Brunswick, Ga., reports seeing a rattlesnake the other day "coming in from sea." The steamer was near the lighthouse when his snakeship was discovered coming in with the tide, head erect, but with rattles trailing in the water. The rattlesnake usually swims with both head and tail erect, the latter waving from side to side, like that of a dog. This one must have been swimming a long time, and was no doubt exhausted, hence allowed the rattles to trail in the water.

—The experiments made by M. Mohlenbruck seem to show that in the mesmeric condition an electric current may have a powerful inductive action upon the human nerves. In the first experiment a watch was placed near the microphone and the ring placed upon the head of the mesmerized subject, who immediately began to beat time with the ticking of the watch; when the microphone contact was touched with a quill feather he placed his fingers in his ears, and on the microphone being removed to a distant apartment and the connection of the circuit completed, as before, a violin was played in the distant room, the patient showing the most distinct indications that he heard the music.

—At Washington one night last week a lady retired to rest with a heavy feeling in the region of her heart. After sleeping an hour or two she was suddenly awakened by the sound of heart-beating like a hammer striking some metallic substance, while the pressure around her heart seemed to be inclosed. She awakened her husband, a light was struck, she thought she was dying. In about an hour, when the clock struck, it was discovered that the striking of the clock had been mistaken for the beating of her heart. Another lady had a cancer that, developing very rapidly, it was so sore that no one was allowed to touch it. After several days of bodily pain and mental anguish the sore proved to be a tick-bite, with the persevering insect still tugging away at it. So much for imagination.

GAMES OF ANIMALS.

How the Lower Orders of Creation Display Their Love of Sport.

That insects have their games and sports I am convinced. This first occurred to me while in the Adironacks some years ago. I was some distance in the wilderness, and having found a small clearing, was resting from my climb, when suddenly the sun, that had been obscured, sent a band of light through an opening in the trees and at once transformed the spot into a veritable fairyland. From all about innumerable forms of insect life seemed to spring into the gladsome light, and soon the great sunbeam was the scene of such revelry as is only imagined by tellers of fairy stories. A band of gnats, or insects resembling them, seemed to be performing some mystic dance. They floated on the beams of light; rising and falling in undulating lines, forming and reforming, now disappearing, as if at some preconcerted signal, only to appear again in some new shape. So regular and exact were these movements that I was impressed that they had some meaning. In and about this band of players various other forms were darting. Such games of tag! such aerial leaps, dives and plunges! all showing that this sunbath was being enjoyed to the utmost extent.

Once, when lying on the rocks that face the ocean, not far from Nahant, I was attracted by a curious clicking sound, first on one side, then on the other; as if a system of signalling was going on. Recognizing the note of one of the locust tribe, I carefully turned and saw half a dozen large, rusty-brown fellows, commonly known as grasshoppers, which so exactly imitated the rocks in color that it was with the greatest difficulty I distinguished them when not in motion. It was apparent that they were engaged in some curious performance, as they were marching about in the most erratic manner, dodging and hiding behind pieces of stone, and exhibiting remarkable acuteness in avoiding each other. All the little irregularities of the rocks were carefully taken advantage of, and their motions in creeping upon one another reminded me of those of a cat, so stealthy and sly were they. This game of hide-and-seek was occasionally varied by a leaping performance. Two locusts would gravely face each other, and then as if at a given signal they would jump into the air, one passing over the other in the flight, alighting and assuming the same positions, only reversed. I watched their maneuvers for some time, and listened to the curious clicking that accompanied them; but finally an incautious movement broke up the games, and the players flew away, seemingly uttering vigorous protests.

The love of sport is not confined to these lowly creatures. I doubt that an animal can be found which does not in some way or at some time show a desire for what we term "amusement." Among the land animals, or rather the land and water animals, the otters are especially noticeable from the fact that some of their games are exactly like those of human device. It was Audubon who first chronicled their actions, he having watched them from a secluded spot, and since then their games have been enjoyed by many observers. The otters (lutra canadensis) are perhaps the originators of the games of sliding down hill and tobogganing.

Otters are always found about streams; building their tunnel-nests in the banks, having as a rule, one entrance into the water, and another on shore. During the winter a bank is selected having a good incline and leading into the water, or sometimes out upon the ice. The snow is then carefully patted down and rendered as smooth as possible, and finally becomes a glare of ice. This accomplished, the otters start at the top of the hill, and turning upon their backs give themselves a push with their hind feet, and away go the living sleds, dashing down the incline, turning at the bottom and with a splash entering the cold water, or darting away on the smooth ice. So fond are the animals of this sport that they keep it up for a long time, and hunters watch the slides, knowing that here they have the best chance of finding the otters.

The sea-otters are just as playful. They are found lying on the great kelp-beds off shore, and have been seen tossing their young into the air, riding on the breakers upon their backs, and going through a number of motions of an extremely interesting nature. That these occurrences are truly games, one needs but to watch the domestic cat and her kittens; and young lions, tigers and all the cat tribe have similar dispositions, while if we turn to the monkey its entire existence is seen to be a continuous game, or an endless series of practical jokes perpetrated upon its fellows.—Wide Awake.

Value of Self-Restraint.

A quick temper is an unfortunate inheritance, but not an irremediable one. Let our young friends understand this as a fact and cease to bewail their weakness. Let them take matters seriously in hand and strive to modify the disposition by keeping a close watch upon themselves, by avoiding occasions of irritation, and those old associates whose temper is known to be readily excitable, like their own. Go, my hot-headed, explosive friend, with kind, good-natured people and cultivate their manner.—Phrenological Journal.

—As it is not always possible to avoid being either too ceremonious or too familiar, our greatest care should be not to err on the side of familiarity, which, says the truthful old proverb, breeds contempt.

THE MATCH-MAKER.

A Woman Who Would Be Unhappy in a Place Where People Do Not Marry.

Mrs. Hartmixum, before her marriage, had been very like other young women, so far as one could see from general observation, but she was married hardly six months before the early symptoms of the match-making disease discovered themselves. A month later her ailment had developed itself completely and with unwonted virulence From that time to the day of her death she never was free from it.

Whether Mrs. Hartmixum's mania for bringing susceptible persons of different sex into propinquity was born of a desire to make others as happy as she had been during the budding period of her own and John Hartmixum's loves, or whether it was intended as a tribute to the happiness of the marital state, of whose blessings she unreservedly recommended all humanity to partake, is not positively known; but it could hardly have been the latter, for it inevitably happened that no sooner did she succeed in getting two young persons mutually interested than she changed her manner and did all that she could to separate them. It would seem, therefore, that she considered courtship rather than matrimony the climax of earthly bliss, and that, consequently, she endeavored to prevent marriage whenever she was able, not only because it was something she could not conscientiously recommend, but also because the fewer the weddings the more hearts would she continue to have at her disposal for the pursuit of her favorite amusement.

It was the misfortune of George Ready to be Mrs. Hartmixum's brother—her only brother. Had Providence seen fit to bless Mrs. Hartmixum's parents with several sons instead of limiting its benefactions in that line to a single gift, it would have been a great relief to George. As it was, he was the only available material in the family given Mrs. Hartmixum to work with, and it followed naturally that she worked George for all he was worth. No young woman could come within the purview of Mrs. Hartmixum but that lady incontinently discovered that the young woman was the very one of all her sex whom she would choose for a sister-in-law, and the only woman on the footstool who could make brother George happy. Immediately, therefore, Mrs. Hartmixum set about bringing the two young people together. The young woman who for the time being happened to be in the ascendant was invited to tea, to card parties, to meetings, to any thing, in short, which gave opportunity for getting the young woman and the young man into each other's company, and it usually happened, and apparently by merest accident, that the young folk found themselves alone before the occasion terminated. Even when it was not convenient to have her brother at hand, Mrs. Hartmixum would in nowise relax her attentions to the party of the other part, but would have her near as often as she could and always keep her as long as possible, in order to sound in her ears the praises of brother George. On the other hand, when George was present and the young woman not by, Mrs. Hartmixum could talk of nothing but the young woman in question. He had her for breakfast, for dinner and for supper; he was forced to eat her with his food and drink her with his drink. Her name was in his ears as he went to bed, that haply he might dream of her through the night.

But let it appear that the young people were beginning to care for one another, presto! Mrs. Hartmixum would have none of it The young woman was out of her books instanter. She knew her no more forever, and all her failings, real or supposititious, were paraded before George's eyes, that he might avoid that young woman as he would a pestilence. This might seem unkindness in Mrs. Hartmixum. It would have been, perhaps, were she not always ready to make amends by bringing forward some other young woman who, if not all things to all men, was all things to brother George, until in her turn she became fond of George and he fond of her, or, which amounted to the same thing, some other young woman happened along; for it was invariably the last comer who received countenance of Mrs. Hartmixum, who was the pearl of great price with which she would ornament brother George's bosom.

And so with all eligible young men and young women. It was her sole pleasure in life to promote love. She paired couples as nonchalantly as she pared her nails, and a great deal oftener. And though, as has already been said, she did not press a couple on to matrimony, whole droves of couples got there nevertheless—for it was not possible for Mrs. Hartmixum to oversee all her work—and the clergy of her town were indebted to her greatly for the aid she rendered them in eking out a living from slender stipends.

Mrs. Hartmixum has passed away. There is no reason why I should not wish her well; therefore I can not hope that she has gone to that place where they neither marry nor are given in marriage; for I know she could never be happy there.—Boston Transcript.

The Family Supplied.

"You love my daughter?" said the old man.

"Love her?" he exclaimed passionately, "why, sir, I would die for her! For one soft glance from those sweet eyes I would hurl myself from yonder cliff and perish, a bleeding, bruised mass, upon the rocks two hundred feet below!"

The old man shook his head.

"I'm something of a liar myself," he said, "and one is enough for a smal' family like mine."—N. Y. Sun.

County Official Paper.

EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21..... ....1888

A majority of the House Committee on Elections have decided not to reopen the contested election case Mr. Carlisle but to confirm his title to the seat. Notwithstanding all the talk that has been made about this case there need be very little doubt that Mr. Carlisle had a majority of all the votes cast in the District and is justly entitled to the seat.

Attorney General Garland holds that the Federal Judges at San Francisco have no right to grant writs of habeas corpus to land Chinese who are refused a landing by the United States Collector of the port. He holds that such persons are not "restrained of their liberty" in the legal sense at all. This is what has always been held by all good lawyers and by every other person of ordinary common sense except such as derived a benefit from the landing of Chinese.

Marcus D. Boruck has begun a libel suit against the Sacramento "Bee." The paper published an article in which the statement was made that Mr. Boruck had drawn large sums of money from the secret service fund allowed the Governor and no accounting could be had of the use made of the money. Mr. Boruck is very sure to go through the examination that will be held without the slightest stain upon his character as an honest man He may err in judgment, as all men do; but he is too honorable a man to use one cent of public money for any other than a public service.

Speaker Carlisle has been confirmed in his right to a seat in Congress. Upon investigation all the charges of corruption and ballot box stuffing and fraudulent counting were found to be unsupported by proof. No sensible man ever believed that the charges were true; even his political opponents will admit that his conduct as a politician has always been honorable, and such as to place him above all reasonable suspicion of engaging in such disreputable practices as were charged against him. Thoebe, the contestant, appears to have been a mere tool for the enemies of Mr. Carlisle.

The newspapers of Los Angeles are doing wisely in telling the truth about the city, though that truth is very discreditable. The "Express" says the city seems to be overrun with thieves of every description. Burglaries occur nightly. Four or five jewelry stores have been robbed within the last few weeks. Yet no arrests have been made for these crimes. The police do not seem to be able to cope with this element. If there are not enough policemen let the force be increased. If the policemen are not of the right kind then let there be some changes made.

It is worth getting out of bed now at 5 o'clock in the morning—provided there is a spare blanket to wrap up in—and take a look at the sky. The planets Venus, Jupiter, Mars and Uranus and the bright fixed star Spica may be seen almost in a row, stretching from near the zenith. or crown of the heavenly arch. down near the horizon on the east. Uranus will be found the highest up barely visible save with an opera glass or small telescope. Spica comes next, the Mars, followed by Jupiter, the largest of the planets. Venus, the fairest of the stars, is last in the line and is down near the horizon on the east.

People talk of the "departed glory" of the Comstock, but those who talk so have no knowledge of the present condition of the mines. In the year that has just passed the Con. Virginia & California mine paid in dividends the enormous sum of one million one hundred and eighty-eight thousand dollars. This is profit equal to one-fourth the present market value of the stock of the mine. Only one other mine in the United States, the Granite Mountain, in Montana, has paid greater dividends than this during the year, the Granite Mountain paid two millions of dollars. The Ontario mine in Utah paid nine hundred thousand dollars in dividends during the year; total dividends paid by the Ontario mine to date, eight millions, eight hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

About the Great Lick Telescope.

The great Lick telescope when mounted and swung against the sky, will have a focus of fifty-five feet length and nearly fifteen feet longer than the largest one ever made. It will be a refractor, which means that the image is formed directly to the eye by the object glass, as contradistinguished from the Gregorian and Herschelian telescopes. The largest instrument ever known of the latter style was Dr. Herschel's. The tube lacked about eight inches of being forty feet in length. What new revelations in the heavens this largest and most powerful of all refractors may disclose from its costly minaret and the surpassing aid it promises to the further study of the surface of the moon alone, are matters which already excite impatient expectation from the whole scientific world.—Boston Herald.

Fashionable Colors and Their Names.

The touching descriptions of the customs which are to grace the royal ladies of Portugal at the approaching festivities, give striking evidence of the total incapacity of the English language to adequately translate the languages which nature speaks through her infinite shades of color. The simple names of the primary colors have long since passed out of the milliner's vocabulary, but they at least produce a definite conception in the mind. Can the same be said of "hemp color," "grocers' blue," "beaver color," "the tints of a wood pigeon's breast," "antique green," "lime blossom," and the "shade of brown seen in the very middle of a broken almond?"

The pet color of the Princess Amelie is seemingly pink, and the varying shades of this color which are to be seen in her trousseau are "plain pink," "pale pink" "palest pink," "rose pink," "shrimp pink," "soft pink," "flesh pink," and "pink matching anemones and rosebuds." Doubtless they make a very sweet bunch of pinks, but it may be questioned whether any one of them will be understood in the same sense by any two individuals.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Development of the Feeble-Minded.

Mr. Richards, who electrified the national conference of charities at Washington last year by his eloquent plea for the feeble-minded, could take to his heart, as he did many years ago, a boy 8¼ years old with a mind so blank that every sense—sight, hearing, taste, touch—all were mute; he had never smiled, did not know his own mother, could not stand on his feet or even roll over on the floor where he lay. Mr. Richards took him to the institution, bestowed every hygienic care upon him, but for weeks could not discover one conscious want. Think how full of wants the normal child is, and thus measure the complete torpor of this one's mind. Mr. Richards then decided, as he said, "to get down to him." An hour a day for three months he read aloud to him, as though reading to an intelligent listener, lying down beside him. Then one day he simply sat in a chair and read to himself. The child appeared uneasy. Mr. Richards had created a want! Lying down beside him he said: "You want me, Sylvanus?" and the child breathed a responsive sound.

Two or three months more of patient reading aloud and again he took his place beside him in silence, and then saw the child trying to do something, and gradually lifted his finger and laid it on the reader's lips. Again the reading was continued, giving the child always the privilege of thus opening the lips. At last he gave his friend a smile of recognition. Mr. Richards said that smile paid him 10,000 times for all he had done, and he said to Dr. Howe: "If we can redeem one we will redeem them all over the country. Every state will found institutions for these unfortunates and every intelligent being shall feel that it is a privilege to enter this great work." We will not stop to trace the successive steps by which this child was led to walk, to talk, to grasp thoughts of God, the Creator, to feel a longing for mother-love, and finally to greet his own parent with a joyful, "Oh, my mother, I am glad to see you!"—Cor. Inter Ocean.

Singapore a City of Pets.

The city of Singapore is the chief entrepôt of the Asiatic pet trade. All along the harbor the clamor of captive birds and monkeys hails the purchaser from hundreds of shops. Chinese trainers, Parsee wholesale dealers and Malay peddlers are ready to sell or buy anything from a parquet to a hunting leopard. Singapore is the Cape Town of the Asiatic continent. Vessels of all nations call either for trading purposes or for supplies and repairs, for the harbor has the best dry-docks south of Canton, and the cheapest provision market of any Asiatic coast city. Splendid mangosteens, combining the taste of a banana and raspberry, can be bought for a few cents a bushel; sago and yam-roots are equally cheap, and, as the Malay trappers work for a shilling a week the menagerie dealers can afford to sell a monkey at a slight advance on the aggregate of his board bill.

The forests of half a hundred islands and peninsulas contribute to their stock in trade. The Malacca junks bring Gibbon apes, restless climbers with enormous arms and stumpy legs. Siam contributes lemurs and hanumans. Borneo an occasional orang; Java, parrots and wild peafowl; Papua, birds of paradise. Of the lemurs alone the local market terms distinguish some twenty different varieties, including the long tailed Tarsius and the Chirmundi Billi—"Bashful Billy"—a curious, phlegmatic variety of the genus Loris.—Dr. Oswald in Cincinnati Enquirer.

How a Horse Should Be Trained.

Mike J. Hester, assistant chief of the fire department, can break the stubbornest horse that ever stood on hoofs. He tamed the horse that Assistant Chief Finnerty is now driving, and that was a shyer, balker, kicker, biter, and everything else that could be mean in horseflesh. Hester made him as docile as a well-trained and good-natured dog. He trains all his horses to answer the word of command, and he can drive them, if he chooses to, without bridle. I know a gentleman who was riding with him to a fire one night when the bridle broke; my friend got cold as ice and pale as a ghost, but Mike called out to his horse, "Steady," when the animal slackened its pace, and then came the peremptory "Whoa," which brought the horse to a stand-still. Mike jumped and tied the bridle, and then resumed his run to the fire. He has all his horses trained so that when he makes his morning round of the engine-houses in his district, the horse follows him like a child.—Globe-Democrat.

Novel Use of the Stereoscope.

A novel use is made of the stereoscope to detect forged bank notes. A note of 100 francs was recently submitted to the experts of the bank of France as issued by a band of forgers, but the execution was so perfect that no defect could be discovered by the closest examination. A suggestion was then made to place the suspected note side by side with a genuine one in the objective of a stereoscope, the two images of which, as is well known overlay each other and form a single picture. The result of the experiment was that the loop in a letter of a forged note did not exactly cover that of the genuine one, showing that they had not been printed from the same plate.—Galignani's Messenger.

Ruin of the Wrestling Business.

There is no wrestler in the country now who is making more than $2,000 a year and there are many of them who do not get enough to provide good board and and clothes for themselves. The wrestling business has been ruin, principally by the class of men who have been in it, many of them without principle, who would wrestle in bar-rooms or do anything for a dollar or two. I made as high as $38,000 wrestling in one season, and I never made less than $6,000. I have announced that I shall wrestle no more, because I believe I have seen my best days, to use a common expression, and I can not get myself in condition now as easily as I once could.—Muldoon in Globe-Democrat.

The Amount of Travel in Cuba.

Cuba may not be very large, but her people do some traveling. During the past year the street car company of Havana transported 5,022,322 passengers, whose fares amounted to $729,953.15 in bank bills, and the number of persons, members of the company, of the police, and for other persons that traveled gratis on same, amounted to 90,094.—Chicago Herald.

Coating Wood Surface with Iron.

Coating the surface of wood with iron as a protection from the heat seems to introduce a new danger. The iron being a good conductor, the wood underneath is heated nearly as much as though uncovered, and is brought by repeated heating to an extraordinary degree of combustibility so as to become liable, according to Mr. Braidwood, to spontaneous ignition.—Chicago News

The American Buffalo Nearly Extinct.

The bureau of statistics estimates that the buffalo or bison are so nearly extinct that there are not more than 1,000 head in existence. A Texas cattleman has concluded to keep a herd of them on his ranche, and inter-breed some of them with ordinary cattle. The result of the experiment excites considerable interest.—Detroit Free Press.

How the Prisoners Shaved Themselves.

The jailer of the Bibb county (Ga.) jail was surprised to find that two of his prisoners were cleanly shaved every day or two. Investigation showed that the shaving had been done with a piece of glass from a small bottle.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

TAKE
SIMMONS
LIVER REGULATOR

For all Diseases of the
Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Spleen.

This purely vegetable preparation, now so celebrated as a Family Medicine, originated in the South in 1828. It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. SATURDAY, JANUARY 21 .....1888.

MARRIED.

CLARK—EPPERSON—At Bishop Creek, January 15, 1888, by Rev. Andrew Clark, Ira Clark and Miss Fanny Epperson, both of Bishop Creek.

The town is very quiet; nothing stirring; not even mush.

The hens are laying off on a strike; not an egg in town.

Beef is reported to be eight cents per pound on foot at Reno.

Since the cold snap set in six men have been frozen to death in Nevada.

A pest house has been fitted up at Reno in anticipation of a visitation of small-pox.

Mr. T. C. Boland came up from Keeler last Tuesday and was in town a couple of days.

The Farmers' Union store at Laws is to be moved into Bishop Creek, so it is reported.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Barnes came up from Cottonwood and spent a few days in town this week.

Joe August came in from Cerro Gordo about a week ago; he was unwell but is now all right again.

A. D. Gilbert has been in town most of the week—but he doesn't want anything said about it.

Last Saturday night was the coldest ever known in San Francisco since Americans settled there.

Mr. Rothi, the photographer, will be in Keeler about January 22d for a few days. Don't miss it, boys.

Mr. R. F. Brooks, of Round Valley, came down last Wednesday and remained in town a day or two.

The water pipes at Virginia City were frozen up and people have to melt ice to get water for domestic use.

A Board of trade has been organized at Visalia. The development of Tulare county will be greatly aided by the Board.

Suit for divorce has been begun by Mrs. Fannie Elliot against W. C. T. Elliot. A. R. Conklin is attorney for Mrs. Elliot.

No butter to be had; the cows have all dried up; so has everything else except a few jaw workers, who never get weary.

Eclipse of the moon next Saturday evening. The middle of the eclipse will be about twenty minutes after six o'clock.

Several law suits postponed; lawyers all sick except George Gill, who was the only able bodied lawyer in town at the beginning of the week.

This will be a great year for stump speakers; rotten eggs should be carefully prepreserved for use until the campaign commences.

Reno is on the eve of a wood famine. The Gazette of Monday reports that not more than fifty cords of wood were for sale in the town.

The Fresno Expositor says that Judge Hill has up to date turned into the county treasury $2,000 from fines collected in whisky cases.

In Dakota a newly married couple were frozen to death while asleep. The woman was lucky to escape by death from such a man and such a climate.

Pat Dugan, an old resident of Eureka, Nevada, and a former owner of the Richmond mine has been declared insane and commited to the asylum at Reno.

Last Wednesday Mr. Stephen Decker received a handsome two-seated carriage from San Francisco. Guess there is no mistake about what is coming this time.

At Bishop Creek and at Laws Rawson & Andrews are putting up large quantities of ice. They will be able to supply the market during the coming summer.

The centre of the small pox epidemic in San Francisco is in Chinatown. There appears to be no end to the plagues that accompany the Chinese wherever they locate.

Mr. George W. Penter, of Bodie, was at Independence last Saturday. He reported that the coldest weather he had ever known at Bodie prevailed during the last two weeks.

Governor Waterman has given a commission to Thomas C. Boland of Keeler, as a Notary Public. Mr. Boland has long been a Notary and this is but a reappointment.

A bill has been introduced in Congress to confirm the bargain made with the Pintes for the right of way through the Walker River Reservation for the Carson & Colorado railroad.

The Sunday evening service at the M. E. Church will be held half an hour earlier until further notice. The first bell will be rung at half past six o'clock and the service will begin at seven.

Mrs. Clara Bell McDonald has been acquitted of the charge of an assault with an intent to murder her father-in-law, Dr. McDonald. The jury gave insanity as the reason for acquittal.

Since June 13th eighty shipments of ore have been made from the Ida mine, at Garfield. The average return from the ore has been $188; it was all sent to the Douglass reduction works, at Dayton.

It is said that when an Indian dies his surviving relatives pay all his debts. It would add materially to the prosperity of country editors if some of their subscribers would turn Indian and then die.

A corporation has been formed at Stockton with a capital of a million dollars, the object being to irrigate all the land east and south of the town. No attention is paid to the Wright irrigation law.

From Eastern Nevada come reports of heavy losses among cattle. The cold is intense and much snow is on the ground; feed is very difficult to get and large numbers of cattle are perishing.

Fifteen inches of snow lay on the ground at Grass Valley after the recent storm. The water ditches were filled with snow and frozen up and 600 miners were thrown out of work in consequence.

John Fleming came in from Darwin about two months ago very sick. He is yet at the Norman House and though still quite weak he is improving. Doctor Woodin has him in charge.

In Ruby Valley, Nevada, the snow is reported to be from four to six feet deep. In the valley there are about forty thousand head of cattle and stockmen fear that most of them will perish.

The supply of vaccine matter is reported to be exhausted at San Francisco. From all over the State and from Nevada orders have been sent to San Francisco for virus, many of which cannot be filled.

Recent analyses by public officers show that adulteration of wine made in our own State is very largely practiced. Letting the stuff itself severely alone will be the best means to stop the roguery.

A refrigerator car will be run the coming summer from the new slaughter house at Bishop station. Rawson and Andrews can thus supply fresh meat at all points along the line of the C. & C. road.

Frank Andrews of Candelaria, and C. B. Rawson have bought the Peeler butcher shop at Bishop Creek; they have made improvements upon the place and will do a wholesale butcher business only.

San Francisco papers continue to give assurance that there is no cause for general alarm over the small-pox epidemic. It will be just as well however to see to it that vaccination is thoroughly attended to.

The Enterprise reports very cold weather at Virginia City. Last Saturday evening the thermometer marked 22° below zero at the Utah mine. This is the coldest weather ever known by white man on the Comstock.

The Davisville Signal reports the thermometer at 20° above zero last Saturday morning at that place. Davisville is fourteen miles from Sacramento. The citru belt is getting sadly narrowed this winter.

Andy McGinty, who killed a man named Barton at Coleville, Mono county, on May 30, 1885, was tried at Bridgport last week. He pleaded guilty of manslaughter and was sentenced to seven and a half years imprisonment.

Mr. Ira Clark and Miss Fanny Epperson were married at Bishop Creek last Sunday. The marriage ceremony was performed by the father of the young man. The groom is under nineteen years of age and his bride is under sixteen.

The Esmeralda News says it is reported that the Lucky Hill series of mines in Columbus district will be started up shortly and a force of thirty men will be employed at once, which will be increased as rapidly as possible.

A general revival of mining is reported in Southern Arizona. The supply of miners is not equal to the demand and wages have increased. Large numbers of prospectors have lately gone into the country, many of them Eastern people.

Many lives have been lost by the intense cold of the last few weeks. In Colorado, Utah, Montana, Minnesota, Dacota, Iowa, Nebraska and Idaho people have been frozen to death. Many have had feet so frozen that amputation was necessary.

The largest accumulation of gold in the world is in the United States treasury; the amount is $282,000,000. The National Bank of France has $237,000,000; that of Germany has $107,000,000; the Bank of England has $100,000,000.

The company that proposes to erect smelting furnaces at Chino, San Bernardino county, represents two millions of dollars capital. If the company go ahead with work as is talked of, our neighbor county will have a big boom.

It is said that a temperature of 60° below zero was reached last Sunday night at Elko, Nevada. This is very likely to be a mistake; mercury becomes solid before that degree of cold is reached and it may be doubted if there is any other kind of thermometer at the place.

Rev. G. W. De La Matyr has bought the farm formerly owned by L. Case, near Bishop Creek. The farm contains 160 acres. Mr. De La Matyr will probably make his home there but not for some time yet. He is Superintendent of the Nevada Conference of the M. E. Church.

Wednesday morning of last week the rear car of a passenger train jumped the track on the Tehachipa grade. The car rolled down the mountain side and turned over several times; there were twenty persons in it yet none were killed or dangerously hurt. The car took fire and was burned up.

Carson is keeping up its reputation for wickedness. The plain whereon the town stands would make a good sized lake and not far off is a fine site for a pillar of salt. It might be prudent for Carsonites to count noses and make sure that they have enough on the right side to secure them against a repetition of the old judgment.

There are reports of good prospects in mines in the neighborhood of Hawthorne. Very rich gold ore has recently been found in the Gold Bar mine. The Half Moon mine in the same district has yielded some fine ore lately. Wood & Olsen, the lessees of the Lapanta mine have a large force of men at work and are doing well.

The Supervisors of Plumas county have lately passed a sheep license ordinance; it is substantially the same as the Mono county ordinance. The Board also passed an ordinance for the appointment of health officers for the different districts of the county. This was done as a measure of precaution against the spread of small-pox.

The risks in mining are greater than first class mortgages on city property or in government bonds, but the profits are vastly greater also. The risks may be rendered moderate by the exercise of ordinary business prudence in ascertatning the value of what is offered before buying, and in securing honest and competent management thereafter.

Appeal has been taken from the decision of the Register of the Land Office here in the case of Scott against Cashbaugh. The land in contest is near Bishop Creek. It is alleged that the evidence offered by Cashbaugh did not establish the facts of necessary residence upon the land and improvements by Cashbaugh.

A few evenings ago some holders of Louisiana Lottery tickets were comparing notes at Mairs Hotel. One of the party said he had been quite lucky; he had been buying tickets during the last three years and had won quite a number of prizes. On figuring up he found that the cost of the tickets had exceed the amount of prizes by forty-seven dollars. No doubt the sellers of the tickets were satisfied with the result.

Alfalfa.

Some cattle raisers hold that alfalfa alone is not as good food for cattle as when some other provender is used with it. The Reno Gazette says that it is argued by a number of cattle raisers that such feed is the cause of disease among stock, that it is a butter producing grass, that it ruins the breeding qualities of cows and heifers, and is only good for fattening stock for the beef market. All stock-growers acknowledge that a few acres of salt grass enclosed in an alfalfa pasture, is of great value to stock no matter for what purpose they are raised. Many farmers now stack their wheat and barley straw in their alfalfa pastures and find it of great benefit in fattening their stock, increasing the milk and butter production of their dairy cows, and in every way being an advantage to their health and growing qualities. It is noticed, too, that both cattle and horses will leave alfalfa hay for days at a time to feed on straw stacks thus placed in the pasture.

The Carson Mint.

Much uneasiness was felt in Carson lately by the report that the mint there would be abolished. Senator Stewart called upon the President to inquire about the matter and wass assured that there was no intention whatever to abolish the mint, and that a successor to Mr. Tuttle, the present Superintendent would be nominated soon. Mr. Tuttle will be allowed to remain in charge of the mint until his successor shall be appointed. California east of the mountains would be injured by the closing of the mint at Carson. No doubt the Representative from the Sixth Congressional District of California, Mr. Vandever, would do all in his power, if necessary, to keep the mint at Carson from being closed.

San Carlos Mine

At the San Carlos mine recent developments are very favorable. An ore body was struck a few days ago in the tunnel the extent of which is not yet known. The vein is three and a half feet wide, and of this two feet is solid ore. On Wednesday one man took out a ton of this that is worth one hundred dollars. At the beginning of the tunnel the ground was very hard, but during the past month it has been much easier. Mr. Russell is pushing the work along as usual.

No Cause for Grumbling.

Our people are grumbling terribly because of the unusual cold weather. But we ought to make note of the fact that this is a cold snap of unusual severity all over the country. We have no snow to wallow through; carpenters and others are working out doors every day and there is plenty of feed in the open country for stock. While the weather seems severe to us who are not used to such cold visitors who come here from all parts north of us think it is delightful.

Scarcity of Flour.

Mr. Brooks, a merchant of Round Valley, reports a flour famine up there. He says that Mr. John E. Jones, the miller, got sick and was unable to run the mill. Then cold weather set in and when Mr. Jones got well enough to work the flume and mill wheel were frozen up solid and may occasion weeks of delay. Mr. Brooks says the only man in the valley who has any flour is Mr. A. J. Shipley, a farmer, and he has already loaned his neighbors about all that he can spare.

Suicide.

On Friday afternoon of last week Samuel Ralston committed suicide at Georgetown, Eldorado county. He shot himself with a pistol. He had been engaged in mining at Georgetown for the last five years. The young man was the son of W. C. Ralston, than whom no man did more for the early prosperity of California. A lonely life in a mining camp, the failure of enterprises and memories of past troubles are supposed to have preyed upon his mind and led to his sad death.

Train Ditched.

Much uneasiness was caused by the report of the wrecking of a train on the Central Pacific last week. A train was ditched near Blue Canyon on Saturday morning. J. C. Day and J. Wright, both the engineers, were hurt but not seriously. No passengers were injured. Two engines were attached to the train and both ran into the bank and were wrecked. It required eleven hours to clear away the wreck. The cause of the accident is not known.

Some men drive away all their own business in order that they may find time to attend to their neighbors' affairs; they don't find the exchange profitable but appear to get a heap of enjoyment out of it.

There is one place in town where a good hearty drink of liquid can be got and that is the watering trough in front of Levy's hotel. All the horses want to stop there and if you were to offer them anything else the would answer neigh.

There was a land contest at the Land Office here last Thursday. The parties were Mrs. Smith, widow of the late Elihu Smith, and Walter E. Lamar. The land in contest is on Black Rock Slough. It was alleged that Mrs. Smith had failed to comply with the law in regard to making improvements. The testimony offered was held not to sustain the allegation and the case was dismissed by the Register.

From all parts of the State come reports of unusual cold weather. Here in Owens Valley all the old settlers say that no such cold has been known since the winter of 1872. At Independence the lowest temperature we saw marked by any thermometer was eighteen degrees above zero, being fourteen degrees below freezing point. Others report still lower temperatures. At Los Angeles ice formed thick enough to admit of skating, so it is reported. There is not yet any report of the damage done to the orange crop.

Last Sunday a citizen of Big Pine was arrested on a charge of threatening violence and using a pistol to intimidate. The party was brought to Independence and upon an examination before a justice was discharged from custody, there not being evidence enough to secure conviction should a trial be had. A suit for divorce will be the result of the trouble. The parties are of mature age and the wife an excellent woman, intelligent above the average and highly respected by all who know her.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.

JOHN C. EVANS, Stoutland, Mo., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take as much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house, if they had to take the feathers from under their wife and babies to pay for it."

JOHN R. DUDGE, JR., jeweler, Normal, Ill., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. Yet, it is the best machine ever invented by man. 24. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. 25. If you run short, you can not buy ours for $100."

I will ship a sample to then. Gaining an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best washer in the world for saving labor, clothes and soap. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.

IF WE KNEW?

Would it be better if we knew?
If we could lift the veil which hides
The inner shrine where soul abides—
Would life seem nobler, or more true?

If we could trace each circle round,
And see as angels see, and know
As he from whom life's currents flow,
Would hearts be happier for truth found?

Should we find more to love, or less
Within the mirrored soul of each
Could we discern the utmost reach
Of spirit's deepest consciousness?

HINTS ABOUT DIAMONDS.

Size Not the Best Criterion of Their Value—A Broker's Story.

"Do you know anything about diamonds?"

"No."

"I am surprised at the admission. Nearly every man thinks he is posted. It usually falls to the lot of the common individual to buy diamonds, more or less, in the course of his career, and in that experience to gather more misinformation than is disseminated on any other subject. Some of the misinformation is scattered purposely, but much of it ignorantly. It is a part of a jeweler's business to talk well. Consequently whenever he stands behind his counter and a customer steps in front of it he feels it his duty to fill the customer's head with pleasant impressions about the goods offered. Of course that is business. I do not say that there is more willful misrepresentation about diamonds than about any other goods, but I do say that the ordinary jeweler is a mighty poor judge of the value of diamonds."

Thus spoke an importer to a friend the other day.

"There is only one class of men," the proprietor continued, "whom the trade fully trust, and they are the brokers. A diamond broker is not merely a man who sells, but one who can sort and appraise. Practice is of course necessary in this work, but a man must be gifted in that direction if he ever hopes for success. In New York there are not ten men whose judgment about a paper of diamonds is conclusive. The trade on both sides—that is, the importer on one side and the manufacturer or retailer on the other—rely on these men. An importer does not sell to jewelers directly, but always through the broker. When the stones arrive the broker sorts them and compares them with the invoice. That being correct, the broker puts the packages in his pocket and goes out to visit the trade. He usually returns with a more bulky package than he takes out, the stones having been exchanged for checks, notes or bills.

"There is a broker now in the other room preparing to go out. We send for him whenever we receive an invoice. He gets 1 per cent. on his sales, and he is now so well known in the business that for working three or four hours a day three or four days in the week he can earn about $3,000 a year. He adds to that income by appraisement and other expert labor during his leisure. Rarely has he left this office with less than $15,000 worth of diamonds in his inside pocket, and he has carried $75,000 worth at a time. We never dream of asking security from him, and in all his dealings every stone has been accounted for. Frequently he accommodates friends at the prices which he asks of jewelers. He may be useful to you, and you can rely on what he says."

The broker presently appeared ready for his rounds. Nothing about him suggested his occupation. A pickpocket would have passed him by as not worth the game. Introductions over, the broker did some unbuttoning, and drew from a pocket close to his shirt a morocco pocketbook of perhaps a dozen compartments. The compartments were filled with slips of white paper, which the broker took out one at a time with habitual caution. Some of the packages contained single stones, and in some there were matched groups, sparkling as only diamonds can. Another package contained an assortment of oblong, amber colored fragments, which a housewife would have boiled unhesitatingly if they had been sent to her for tapioca. They were uncut diamonds, and worth $1,500. The importer's friend selected a pair of small brilliants, although larger ones were laid before him for less money.

"You have the making of an appraiser in you," said the broker. "Almost any jeweler would have chosen the larger pair, failing to see that the smaller ones are of purer color and greater brilliancy. To the ordinary eye the difference in quality is not perceptible, except in certain kinds of light, when the difference is plainly apparent. I suppose jewelers satisfy the demands of customers when they prefer large stones to small ones of better quality, for size is vastly overrated in diamonds. The kind of diamond you have chosen is worth $150 a carat. The one you rejected is worth $80 a carat, and that difference would unmistakably appear probably just at the time when the wearers would least like to have it. Under good conditions of light the difference would be plain. Yet there are men in the business—the majority of them, I might say—who would rather have $1,000 worth of large stones at $10 a carat than double the value in stones worth $200 a carat. They can get more money for the cheaper stones.

"There is something about a jewelry store," the broker continued, "that makes goods show better in the eyes of buyers than they do anywhere else. A friend of mine wanted a pair of diamonds for earrings and commissioned me to get them. It was several weeks before I happened to have a pair that I thought would suit him. They were worth $1,500. He admired them, but could not quite make up his mind that they were what he wanted. After thinking over it for about ten days he decided not to take them. The next day I went into a large store up town. While showing my goods to the diamond buyer my friend entered the store. I was in the office, where he could not see me. The buyer was sent for to wait on my friend, who wanted to buy some stones that could be recommended as first class.

"'If you haven't anything to suit him,' I said to the buyer, 'come back to me. I think I can fit you out.'

"In a few minutes he came back. I gave him the $1,500 pair. They filled my friend's eye completely. He bought them for $2,500, and went home delighted. A few days later he came to me, glowing over his purchase. I stopped him before he had said much and turned narrator myself. I think that before I got through he was almost disgusted enough to give the diamonds away. To this day they have not given him a moment's genuine pleasure. Still, $2,500 was not a high price for them, according to the jeweler's standard. A large jewelry establishment is about as expensive to run as a yacht, and good profits become a necessity. But it would be hard to comfort my friend with that reflection. He will begrudge that extra $1,000 to his dying day."—New York Times.

THE TURTLE AT HOME.

How the Bahama Negroes Harvest the Crop—Capture of a Prize.

The green turtle of the metropolitan restaurant, when it does not come from the remnants of the roast veal and fried chicken of the day before, comes chiefly from the Bahamas and from Nassau, the only city of the Bahamas. They are harvested also in Cuba, Hayti and at many points on the southern coast, but in the Bahama Islands they seem to find the richest feeding grounds. Circuit Justice L. D. Powles, of Bahama Island, whose experience has been ample, telling how the amiable and luscious beast is captured in his neighborhood, says:

"These families who live in the out islands and do all the turtle fishing that is not done by the strictly business schooners and men from Nassau, have for a home a house whose walls are built of coral limestone, roughly plastered together and roofed with palmetto thatch. There are probably twelve or fourteen in the family, and they all live in one little room, pretty nearly bare of furniture. Nobody but papa and mamma rise to the dignity of a bed. The rest can sleep anywhere. When not asleep, nearly all their lives are spent out of doors. Behind the house is some big tree, where mother cooks and washes and father whacks her and the children by turns, unless, as occasionally happens, she is boss, and does the whacking herself. They have not much need of money, for they can grow oranges, bananas and other tropical fruits in plenty, with corn and sweet potatoes, and fish is to be had for the catching. But the out-islander stands sometimes in need of clothes and groceries, which have to be paid for. As turtles will either produce cash or its substitute, he occasionally goes off on a turtling expedition. After days of postponing and putting off, he finally pulls himself together, and off he goes, pressing all his family into the service. There is not much need to close up the house, for there are no robbers, and no probable intruder except the hogs, which don't count. Still he probably shuts it up, for 'de look of de ting,' for the darky is very punctilious about certain matters.

"The turtle beach may be many miles away, but most likely he has a boat, in which he manages to reach it in the course of a few hours. All the party have bare feet, but otherwise are dressed much the same as civilized people. External decency is one of those matters on which the Bahamian negro is most scrupulous.

"Arrived at the turtle beach, he puts one of the boys in the boat and lets him row along it, while the rest of the party walk, keeping a sharp lookout for turtles. Sometimes the beach is ten miles long, and perhaps the party draw the whole of it blank, in which case they beach the boat and camp out for the night. Perhaps they have the luck to see a monster green turtle before they have measured half the distance. If the party is in luck and sights a monster female turtle of 500 pounds, laying her eggs in the hot sand a little ahead, the party divides at once and the chattering ceases—silence is a necessary element of success. One-half of the party make for the water to cut off her retreat; the other half steal noiselessly up and turn her on her back—a tough job in the case of a turtle as big as 500 pounds. Once on her back she is helpless, and some of the other party go off in search of palmetto leaves or tough grass with which to tie her fins, while the others stand round and talk to her, jeering and making game of her forlorn condition, taking care, however, to give her mouth a wide berth, for she is still able to bite with considerable effect. When the others return they cut slits in her fins and tie them back tightly together. Thus secured, she is carried on board the boat and given in charge of the boy, while the land contingent start on their road rejoicing, in search of another victim. Before going on, though, they will lunch on the eggs their prisoner has left behind her. These eggs are a delicacy much prized in Nassau, but probably by the time they get there they will have gone bad, and it is only on rare occasions, when turtles are caught in New Providence or its immediate neighborhood, that they are found in the market.

"The eggs disposed of, the party moves on once more, and perhaps, just at the close of the day, catches a hawksbill, a good deal smaller in size, but quite as valuable, for this time the value is in the shell, not in the weight. This is a good day's work; the family row home contented, and place their turtles in a cool place to await the chance of a ship to carry them up to Nassau."

Another way of catching turtles is the pegging of them in shoal water—that is, striking them with a grain or two pronged spear. This way is adopted by vessels engaged in the turtle fisheries, but it can only be used in the case of green turtles, as it damages the shell.

Besides the green turtles and hawkbills, there is another species called the lubberhead, which is of no practical use at all. The flesh of both the latter species is considered valueless, but the natives manage to make substantial meals out of them all the same.

Most of the turtles taken are females, for it is the females only that come ashore for the purpose of laying their eggs, the males remaining usually in much deeper water. The female is easily distinguished from the male by her tail, which is so short as to be absolutely nominal, while his usually averages six or eight inches in length.—New York Sun.

A New Printing Machine.

From France comes the announcement of a newly invented rotary printing machine, which is said to print, superpose and fold publications from two rolls of paper, if so desired. Suitable devices are provided—there are four cutting and folding cylinders, two of which cut and fold the sheets from one roll, while the other two operate upon the remaining one. Each of the two pairs of cylinders are, however, capable independently of cutting and folding the sheets.—Public Opinion.

Justices in Their Robes.

The justices of the supreme court of the United States now wear plain black robes. In the beginning of the century the robes had a scarlet facing, because once Chief Justice John Jay borrowed the robe of the chancellor of New York, which was so faced, and all the other justices followed the style. In 1808, however, some one asserted that the red trimming was too English, and it was discarded, and the plain black has been used ever since.—Chicago Herald.

The Camels of Texas.

In 1852 the United States government sent a small herd of camels into Texas with the idea of using them and their get to cross the so-called Great American Desert. The camels prospered and multiplied; but when the war came they were scattered through the state and in Arizona, and many of became wild. Railroads have solved the Great American Desert problem, and the camels have fallen into innocuous desuetude.—New York Sun.

AN AGGRIEVED CITIZEN

He Pours His Woes Into the Ear of Bill Nye.

On board a day coach of the great trunk line running from the Battery via Sixth avenue to Harlem I fell in the other day with a highly cultivated old gentleman who now resides in Brooklyn. Together we enjoyed the delightful stretch of dark red scenery and advertisements which greets the enraptured eye along this great scenic route. Together we inhaled the thousand odors of hot, sour alleys and damp cellars, and together we looked into second story rooms where poverty lay panting in the awful heat that had accumulated all day and now shut down with the night like a stifling garment. In our conversation he said:

"I generally aim to let the papers alone if they'll let me alone, but when I first came here a friend of mine brought me a slip that he had cut out of a prominent morning paper in which my name was used in a way that made me mad; and so I went right down to the office of the paper. Before I went I told my wife about the piece and that I was going to see about it. She saw that I was excited and she became alarmed. She hung on to me quite a while and said she wished I wouldn't go. We had always got along so well, and since we had been married I had never killed anybody, and she wished I would take her advice and not go, but I was thoroughly indignant and mad. So I went down, and at the counter I asked to see the editor.

"The young man at the window where I went was counting the words in a 'Want' advertisement, and it was a long time before I could get his eye. Then he said in a brief, cold way that the editorial rooms were on the fifth floor. I did not like his way, and I would have been glad to lick him if I could have got over into his cage, but I couldn't. Then I went to the elevator. I was going to get in, but the elevator boy, who weighed about nineteen pounds, put his hand against my person and gently pushed me out.

"'You can't go upstairs without stating your name and your business and who you want to see. Here is a card that you can fill out.'

"He said I would have to be explicit. If I wanted the city editor, or the marine editor, or the literary editor, or the polo editor, or the birth and death editor, or the scrapping editor, I would find them in; but the managing editor and the telegraph editor and the night editor and the mirth editor and the bathing editor were all out.

"Finally I went in and found a small, good natured man that I could have handled without any trouble, but when I stated my business he said that it was not in his line at all, but that I ought to go to the city editor. By that time the city editor had gone to lunch. I waited for him till I got so hungry myself that I thought I would fall apart.

"When he came he had about nineteen men to talk to all at once for an hour or so; then he let me in and I told him what the trouble was. He didn't remember any such story in the paper as I spoke about, but would find out about it and see what reporter handed it in. Meantime he would advise me to write out a statement of my side of the case and leave it there. He would investigate the matter when the reporters got in in the evening.

"I went to a long table and wrote most all the afternoon on a piece which was not so scathing when I got through with it as I thought it was going to be, so I tore it up. Then I wrote another one. It was quite bitter, but not so bitter as I wished it had been. It had tame places in it where it seemed to all flatten out and fail to get there. I never suffered mentally so much in my life, and now and then when I wiped my brow on the tail of my linen coat I could see that the city editor seemed to enjoy it. By dusk I had completed an article that was carefully written, and yet I did not expect that it would be copied very much. It was inclined to be ornate in its style, and still there were words in it like 'eggregious,' for instance, that I didn't feel sure I had spelled right. It was now night, and I went home, leaving my article for the morning paper and feeling proud that I was getting mixed up with literature.

"My wife was anxious to find out if I had anybody's gore on my hands before I went into dinner, but I convinced her that my heart was still pure and guiltless, but that I had written a piece for the paper that would stir up the town in the morning.

"I looked it through hurriedly, but didn't find my piece. Most everything else was there but that, however. It was crowded out! Probably the mush and milk sociable editor had a piece that he wanted to run in in place of it, and owing to his influence he had succeeded. I was greatly irritated. I had lost one day from my business, but I decided to go down to the office again and see what the matter was.

"This time I got to the city editor at once, and he said if I would write another statement he would promise that it should not be overlooked, and said that as I was cooler now I would no doubt write a better piece. So I was fool enough to write another flapdoodle card for the paper. It took me till 12:30, and as near as I can remember simply proved over my own signature that I was an ice cream man who aspired to be a large, straw colored jackass. When I took it in to the city editor he asked me if I had the slip cut from the paper to which I referred. I produced it. He looked it over a moment, and then he said:

"'I am sorry that you have been here for two days and sprained your Thinker over this matter, and absorbed your time preparing an exhaustive article for our paper in your defense, for this slip is cut out of some other paper. I don't know what paper it is, but we haven't got any such type as that in our office.'

"He then stated that he would not detain me any longer, and I don't believe he could if he had wanted to. I went down the stairs rather than meet the elevator boy again, and soon found myself on the street. I bought my wife a new dress on the way home, and told her I had thought better of my assassination when I got to her account.

"That was ten years ago," said the old man, as he arose to go, "and although I have not always done right, I can truly say that the gore of no newspaper man is on my hands."—New York World.

HIT IT HARD.

A Dollar Investment Produces $5,000.

As noiselessly as the snow comes down did the magic number, 69,368, slip from the wheel of The Louisiana State Lottery on the 8th inst., and as noiselessly were the glad tidings communicated by the managers to the fortunate owner of the lucky number, Mr. Thomas R. Miller, now residing at 1213 Lawrence street, in this city, that he had drawn one-tenth of the second capital prize of $50,000—or in other words, the handsome sum of $5,000—on an investment of $1, which amount the company hold subject to his order, and would be happy to remit at his pleasure.

Coming as this magnificent prize did, without an effort, it may be pardonable if in the language of precious stones, it is likened to the topaz—November's jewel—which, so long as its owner holds undisputed possession, is supposed to keep off bad dreams, and in other ways brighten the sunshine of his daily life.

A News reporter desiring to secure a correct statement of the facts, actuated him to look Mr. Miller up, which he did yesterday morning, and found him, as informed, at his residence, 1213 Lawrence street. Mr. Miller is a first-class, industrious mechanic, 38 years of age, and holds the confidence and respect of all those with whom he is acquainted.

He has been a resident of Denver for about a year, and he is so infatuated with the "Queen City" that he has concluded to invest his money here in real estate, which will doubtless pay nearly as great a dividend as on his investment of one dollar in the Louisiana lottery.—Denver (Col.) News, Nov. 24.

His Oratory Was Appreciated.

While Senator Harris was speaking at Cynthiana the other day, a half intoxicated Irishman, who had crawled up on the rear of the platform, interrupted him several times with remarks that were not quite intelligible. Finally Mr. Harris turned to the man and said:

"Please don't interrupt me, my friend. I am not much used to public speaking, and if you want to talk I'll have to quit."

"Bless yez!" said the Irishman, "it's not after interruptin' ye I am. I'm only approvin' of what ye say. Faith, and I didn't know it was in yez to do as well as yer doin'."

The senator from Madison was completely knocked out by this speech, but he bowed his thanks to the Hibernian, and joined heartily in the laughter which the latter's response had caused.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Cute Little Johnny.

A lady on Woodward avenue has a little boy who is inclined to freckle and has been told to keep on his hat when out in the sun. Last week she engaged a servant whose face is quite roughened with smallpox. Robbie looked at her very closely and then said to his mother:

"It's too bad, ain't it, mamma?"

"What's too bad?" said his mother.

"That her didn't keep on her hat."

His mother was puzzled and said: "Why should Mary keep on her hat?"

"Cause the sun's jammed all her freckles in."—Detroit Tribune.

THOMAS CARLYLE.

The great Scotch author, suffered all his life with dyspepsia which made his own life miserable and caused his best and truest friends not a little pain because of his fretfulness. Dyspepsia generally arises from disease of the liver and as Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" cures all diseases of this great gland, it follows that while all cannot be Carlyles, even with dyspepsia, all can be free from the malary, while emulating his virtues.

A little girl was eating green corn by gnawing it from the cob when her teeth got entangled with a corn silk. "O, dear, she said impatiently. "I wish when they get corn made they would pull out the basting threads.

A VALUABLE MEDICAL TREATISE.

The edition of 1888 of the sterling Medical Annual, known as Hostetter's Almanac, is now ready, and may be obtained, free of cost, of druggists and general country dealers in all parts of the United States, Mexico, and indeed in every civilized portion of the Western Hemisphere. The Almanac has been issued regularly at the commencement of every year for over one-fifth of a century. It combines, with the soundest practical advice for the preservation and restoration of health, a large amount of interesting and amusing light reading, and the calendar, astronomical calculations, chronological items, etc., are prepared with great care, and will be found entirely accurate. The issue of Hostetter's Almanac for 1888 will probably be the largest edition of a medical work ever published in any country. The proprietors, Messrs. Hostetter & Co., Pittsburg, Pa., on receipt of a two-cent stamp, will forward a copy by mail to any person who cannot procure one in his neighborhood.

HEADACHE AND DYSPEPSIA.

No. 512 West 57th St. N. Y.
June 29, 1885.

I have been a martyr to bilious headache and dyspepsia. Any indiscretion in diet, over-fatigue, or cold, brings on a fit of indigestion, to be followed by a headache lasting two or three days at a time. I think I must have tried over twenty different remedies, which were recommended as certain cures by loving friends, but it was no use. Like the Irishman, I got no better very fast. At last I thought I would take a simple course of purgation with Brandreth's Pills. For the first week I took two Pills every night, then one Pill for thirty nights; in that time I gained three pounds in weight, and never have had an ache or a pain since.

REVENGE.

Revenge is a naked sword—
It has neither hilt nor guard.
Would'st thou wield this brand of the Lord:
Is they grasp then firm and hard?

But the closer thy clutch of the blade,
The deadlier blow thou would'st deal,
Deeper wound in thy hand is made—
It is thy blood reddens the steel.

And when thou hast dealt the blow—
When the blade from thy hand has flown—
Instead of the heart of the foe
Thou may'st find it sheathed in thine own!

SHOOTING A LEOPARD.

Exciting But Dangerous Sport in India.

Running Down a Child-Eater and Killing Him at His Horrible Feast—Episodes of the Hunt—A Bloody Struggle.

"I was reading some shooting stories of the far West, the other day," said an old globe trotter to the Herald man, "and the sport they have out there can not compare with what they have in the far East. There is not that element of 'danger' in it which conduces much to the enjoyment of real sport. Of course, you have the 'grizzly,' but, after all, he is an easy mark to hit.

"There are two kinds of leopards in India. One is the cheetah, the common leopard of the plains of Hindostan. This animal confines his attention chiefly to small antelopes, barking deer and jungle sheep. He is frequently caught when young and tamed by the native shikarris, who teach him to assist them in hunting and driving game within shot of the guns of the sportsmen. The other kind of Indian leopard is the 'luckabugga,' a much larger and fiercer animal, who, when he has once tasted human blood, becomes an ogre with a frightful appetite for children. He is chiefly found in the lower ranges of the Himalayas and vast jungles of the Terai.

"One summer's evening I was out with a couple of friends on a shooting excursion from Almora into Nepal. Our tents were pitched on the banks of the Kala Naddee, a river which parts the British possessions in the hills from those of the Nepal Raj. We were getting our guns ready to go out for some black patridges for supper, when the head man of the neighboring village came up to entreat our assistance in killing a leopard which had haunted some neighboring village for many months and had already carried off twelve children. Traps and pitfalls had been set for him in vain. He had evaded all. A poor Zemenden had just come into the village with a woeful story about his six-year-old boy—his only boy—who, when playing before the door of his father's hut in the dust of the evening, had been seized by the leopard and carried off before his father's eyes. The poor man followed the animal and struck it repeatedly with an iron hoe, but it held on and vanished in the jungle. At daylight he had hunted in the track with some friends, but found only a few bones and some bloody hair, remains of his child that a jackal was picking at and a vulture watching. The man said he had watched the place every night, but had never again seen the leopard. The recital of the tragedy excited us, and we pledged ourselves not to leave the neighborhood till this cruel ogre was destroyed. Ram Bex, our head shikarri, was called and ordered to make every inqury as to his whereabouts, and to offer a reward of ten rupees to any native who should give such information as would give us a shot at him.

"It would be endless to relate the many false alarms we had. We sat up all night in trees, with a goat tied below us as bait, near the place where the leopard had last been seen. One night while sitting in a tree with a gun coolie, who held my weapons, I fell into a doze. A friend in a tree about twenty yards off, with a goat below, roused me by the discharge of his rifle. My coolie seized me by the arm and shrieked: 'Sahib, Sahib, luckabugga aya!' (Master, master, the leopard is here!) 'Where, where?' I asked, seizing the rifle he held out to me. 'There,' said he, pointing to a dark object moving through the trees about thirty yards off. Bang—bang—went both my barrels, followed immediately by unearthly yells. We descended from our trees, and found a large, rough pariah dog shot through both hind legs. He was yelling like a fiend and snapping like a crocodile. I borrowed a large Ghoorka Kookrie from our shikarri, and baring my right arm, soon put an end to doggie's squeals.

"One of my friends was very fat, and, as he found a branch of a tree rather inconvenient, had a common native charpoy (sort of bedstead) fixed up in a fork of a tree. On this he reclined with a gun coolie and a large double-barrel gun loaded with slugs. We were tired of the goat bait, so we had got a monkey, thinking a child-eater would be more tempted by its flesh. I was posted in a tree from which I could more readily watch the approaches to my friend's post. About midnight the moon went down and it was almost dark. Half an hour later the monkey chattered, so I cocked both barrels and watched the foot of my friend's tree. The chattering increased. Then came a blaze of light and a loud report, followed by the breaking of branches and a perfect babel of noises. I had a pine torch with me and, clambering down from the tree, lit it and rushed to the spot. There on his face lay my friend, screaming out for me. He had upset his bead. On his back sat the monkey tearing his hair like a wildcat. A few yards from him lay his coolie, with the charpoy on him smashed in half. He was roaring out: 'The leopard is eating me.' A little further off lay a jackal writhing with a dozen slugs in him. I picked up the coolie and helped my friend by knocking over the monkey with the broken leg of the charpoy. After this little upset we lit cheroots and walked back to our tents, which were pitched about two miles off.

Ram Bex, our shikarri, had given notice to all the natives around that if the leopard appeared and carried off any thing information was to be sent to our camp before any pursuit was made. One evening we were at our tent door after dinner, smoking, when we observed on the other side of the river a Ghoorkha coming down the hills at great speed. At the river bank he inflated a sheepskin which he carried, and crossed the rapid stream on it—just as we see on their wall carving that the Assyrians of old did—being carried down about a quarter of a mile by the current. On landing he was met by Ram Bex, who had run out on seeing him approach. They walked toward us, the Ghoorkha gesticulating violently, and we heard the following story:

"The Ghoorkha lived in a hut about a mile from our camp, higher up the river, and only a hundred yards from the water. He had been out for the day on his duty, which was that of a government runner, leaving at home his wife, his baby in arms, and a little girl about six years old. The wife had gone to the stream for water, leaving the baby at the hut door. The little girl had disappeared, and had without doubt been carried off by the leopard. The Ghoorkha found its footmarks on a soft bit of ground, and hastened to us without attempting a pursuit in the dense jungle. Ram Bex decided that it was too late to start that night, but asked us to be ready an hour before daylight. In the meantime he sent to the next village for twenty coolies, who were engaged as beaters at eight cents a head. On turning out in the starlight next morning I saw that our followers and beaters had each got some instrument for making noise. There were tin kettles, tom toms, bells and an old matchlock or two. I and my two friends crossed the river on a plank lashed across two inflated buffalo skins, which kept our guns and powder high out of water. The beaters came over in all sorts of ways, some swimming, some clinging to inflated sheepskins. When we reached the Ghoorkha's hut, the whole of our beaters were extended in a line, I standing in the middle, at the spot where the Ghoorkha had found traces of the leopard. The poor Ghoorkha himself, and Ram Bex, leading a Brinjarry dog in a string, were with me, each of them carrying a spade. At a given signal the whole line started. The beaters yelled, whistled, rang bells and beat tom toms, making noise enough to drive away every leopard within twelve miles. The dog kept steadily to the scent, but our progress at times was very slow through the dense bamboo jungle.

"After proceeding about a mile the dog became very eager, dashed forward, and was not easily held in. In fifty more yards we came to the place where the brute had been supping. The mangled remains of the little girl lay about, only half eaten, and the ogre must have been scared by our noise. Without losing a moment the Ghoorkha and Ram Bex set to work and dug a trench under a tree to leeward of the child's remains, piling up some branches between them and the trench. Into this we jumped. The Ghoorkha departed with his dog in the direction taken by the rest of the party, who kept up the same discordant din as they moved away.

"Ram Bex now told me that the leopard would think from the passing away of the noise that the whole party had gone on, and would be sure to return in an hour or two to go on with his interrupted feast. We must be quiet, for the brute was very cunning, and the slightest sound or smell would send him off and destroy our chance of getting a shot at him. After waiting an hour I pulled out my cigar case, but the shikarri forbade smoking by energetic gestures, neither of us speaking. I had a large double-barrel smooth bore No. 12, loaded with slugs, at full cock in my hand. Ram Bex had my breech-loading rifle with a large conical shell in it. In addition to these we had each a Ghoorkha kookrie and revolver. It was now nine in the morning. The noise of our party had died away over the hills for an hour or more. I remember as if it were yesterday how I had my eyes fixed on the movements of a regiment of white ants, who were piling themselves over the bloody fragments of the poor child that lay about ten yards from me. Suddenly Ram Bex put one finger on my lips, both as a sign to look-out and keep still. My fingers sought the triggers, and my eyes were strained in every direction. I could see nothing until, in about two minutes, I could discern that the grass waved, and the next instant, with a tread of velvet, the leopard glided in front of me. The suddenness of his appearance took my breath away for a few seconds, but, recovering myself, I raised my gun to the shoulder, and in doing this snapped off a little twig from a branch of the brushwood we had piled in front of us. The leopard turned his face full on me. Thinking that he would jump off I pulled off at his chest, letting off, in my nervousness, both barrels. He sprang into the air with a yell and fell backward. Ram Bex was out and by his side before I had risen from my knees, and discharged the rifle in the direction of his heart. When I got up with revolver in one hand and kookrie knife in the other, the brute was tearing up roots and grass with all four paws, and dangerous to approach. My slugs had entered his chest and eyes, and he was blind. I discharged my revolver at his hindquarters, but he writhed and leaped about so violently that it was impossible to take good aim. Ram Bex, with his kookrie drawn, was dodging about for an opportunity to come close enough to cut at the dangerous hind legs and sever the tendons. I went back to the trench to load my gun. As I was loading the grass opened, and the Ghoorkha and his dog rushed up. He gave a shout of joy when he saw the animal kicking and bleeding, let go his dog, who darted at the throat of the leopard, and then himself, disregarding claws and teeth, rushed in on him. With two strokes of his kookrie he cut the hind tendons, and the formidable legs were harmless. At the same time I stepped up and fired into the brute's mouth. This shot killed it. Ram Bex and the Ghoorkha began skinning, and on stripping the back came upon two fresh healed cuts which went right through the skin, and I remembered what the Zemindea had told us a week ago of his following and hacking with a hoe at the monster who was carrying off his children.

"After a hot march of an hour or two we got into camp about noon and had an ovation from the people of the adjacent villages. Every one who had lost a child by the leopard asked for one of its claws, which was hung around the neck of the mourner as an amulet.

"Now, you will see from that," said the old globe-trotter, in conclusion, "that sport in the far East is not all beer and skittles."—Chicago Herald.

THE TREASURY VAULT.

One of the Most Perfect Store-Rooms for Coin Ever Constructed.

I dropped into the Treasury and looked at the workmen who are engaged in constructing the new vault. The Treasury itself looks like a tomb. It has great somber columns down each side of it, and the doors of its basement are so cut that they look as though they were dug out of a solid rock. Every thing about it is massive, and it makes me think more of the Bank of England than any other building I have seen. It is made in the shape of a hollow square, with wide tiers of granite walls running around a court in the center. It is in this court that the new vault is being built. Its interior will be cut up into cells, walled with iron lattice-work, and the workmen are now riveting the iron bars composing it together. These bars must be very strong, as the weight of the silver which is to be put in the vault will be immense. There was a portable furnace blazing away within the vault, and four men were carrying red-hot rivets and sticking them through the holes which had been drilled in these iron bars. They were then rivited by the pounding of a heavy hammer while a man held an iron mallet against them at the back. Each of these lattice-work walls require 2,500 rivets, and it will take more than 100,000 of these rivets to fasten the iron-work of the vault together. The vault is to contain $100,000,000, which is such an immense sum that few people can comprehend it. It will give some idea of it to know that its weight will be 3,580 tons, or the weight of 35,800 men of 200 pounds each. Think of the heaviest man you know, and it would take 35,000 such men to weigh as much as does this silver. It would take 178 freight cars to carry it, and it would take a train a mile and a quarter long to transport it. Its weight would be so much that 6 locomotives could hardly haul it, and if these dollars were laid out so that one just touched the other they would make a line 2,305 miles long. If they were put into a floor, edge to edge, they would carpet ten times the area of the Capitol, or more than thirty acres, and if they were piled one upon another they would reach much more than 1,500 times as high as the Washington monument, making a solid column of silver more than 177 miles high. A million dollars in silver is no small quantity, and when you pack $100,000,000 into a vault it has to be as strong as stone and iron can make it. To rob this vault will be a physical impossibility. To tunnel into it one would have to go under the whole Treasury building, and he would have to drill through a floor of cement and chilled steel before he got to the coin. The slightest noise would be sure to be heard, and the movement of a single bag would cause such a racket as to bring the guard down upon him instanter. No attempt has, I think, ever been made to rob the United States Treasury, and the safeguards about it are so strong that none but the craziest of men would think of trying it.—Washington Letter in Savannah News.

HIS FIRST WALTZ.

The Maiden Effort of a Young Man on the Light Fantastic.

A popular young business man confided the details of an amusing though somewhat delicate situation to a reporter the other day, and the latter is making a base betrayal of that confidence in giving the story to the public, but "murder will out." "It all came of my not having learned to dance," he began. "You see, when I was a kid, and the girls (my sisters) went to dancing-school and were brought up in the way they should go, I did not care for such things, and hooted at the confounded bobbing and twisting and turning, which even now seems rather absurd to me. I voluntarily left school rather young and went into business life, and have since had neither time nor inclination for dancing. As the girls grew older, we had a number of little social hops at the house, but I always managed to get away. I never had any desire to dance until the other evening. A certain young lady, whose black eyes I had admired from a distance for some time, was present at one of our little gatherings. I usually managed to get out of the way when the dancing began, but I was so engaged in conversation with her that the music had struck up before I was aware of it. I let the first dance pass without saying any thing, but I knew my companion was a fine dancer and very fond of the amusement. I think that the first dance was an "octogette," or some thing of that kind, for there were eight people in it. When that was over the musicians struck a lively jingle which I imagined I recognized. That is a polka, sure, thought I—now is my chance. 'Miss Blank,' I said, growing as red as a tulip, 'my sisters have often tried to teach me to dance, but have given it up as a hopeless case. Is—is the thing they are playing a waltz or a polka, or a highland fling, or what is it?' She laughed, but did not answer. After this confession I resumed: 'Will you dare venture a turn?' She was only too ready; she evidently did not know what was before her. I placed my hand timidly on her side and grasped her waist in a vice-like grip. Then I began the polka to the best of my ability, and, to my horror, she began to waltz. I tried to waltz, too, but made a dismal failure of it. The room was small and overcrowded with dancers, and though our career was short-lived we managed to come into collision with almost every couple on the floor. My sister rescued her friend, who took the matter as good-naturedly as could be expected with her torn dress and bumped and crumpled condition generally. I sneaked away into outer darkness, and hereafter will never attempt to imitate the 'Heathen Chinee' by playing a game that I do not understand. I am a fool and I know it, but to have the fact intimated one, two and three times a day for a week by the members of one's own family is not at all consoling.—Rochester Post-Express.

A POWERFUL REMEDY.

Why Uncle John Refused to Swallow His Own Medicine.

In the village of O——, in Central New York, lives a sharp-tongued old bachelor whom I have known for twenty-five years as "Uncle John." Uncle John is something of a character about town, and not destitute of Yankee wit and shrewdness. He used to make and vend in an amateurish way a certain cough mixture, the merits of which he preached to his friends with great enthusiasm, warranting the remedy to cure any cold in twenty-four hours "or no pay." One of his old friends, whom we will call Ike, being afflicted with a severe coughing cold, Uncle John used his best efforts in argument, persuasion, and finally vehement and profane scolding, to get him to try the remedy. But Ike could not be induced to "chance it." Not long after this Uncle John caught a hard cold himself, which was accompanied by a most distressing cough that shook his poor old frame unmercifully. It did not, however, prevent his coming down town and "settin'," as he called it, in Ike's market. The cold hung on for a week or more, and the cough had grown no better. Finally, one day Ike resolved to brave Uncle John's sharp tongue, and tease him a little about his failure to rid himself of the cold, and the following dialogue ensued. You are to understand that Uncle John's replies were interrupted with violent coughing.

"John?"

"What yer want?"

"Got a bad cold, 'ain't ye?"

"Yes; got the wust ever had'n my life."

"Hangs on pretty bad, don't it?"

"Yes; beats all."

Hesitatingly: "why don't you try some o' y'r cough med'cine you wanted ter sell me?"

"I thought mebbe y' was fool 'nough ter ask that question: d'yer s'pose I want ter live forever?"—Harper's Magazine.

The Regular Thing.

An old gentleman of Detroit was passing through the ceremony of taking his fourth wife the other day. At the impressive climax of the good preacherman's part in the performance somebody was heard sobbing in an adjoining room.

"My goodness!" exclaimed one of the guests in a dramatic whisper, "who on earth is that crying on this festive occasion?"

"That?" replied a mischievous member of the experienced bridegroom's family; "that's no body but Em. She always boohoos when pa's getting married."—Detroit Free Press

TWO LITTLE MINERS.

How They Kept Their Parents Supplied With Plenty of Fuel.

Nearly a quarter of a century ago a man who lived in an Eastern State, overtaken by the American passion for the hardships of pioneer life, moved with his family to the then unsettled West. The family consisted, besides the husband, of a wife and two little daughters, and the journey westward of many hundreds of miles was made in a covered wagon. After numerous hardships the little household at length reached what is now the great State of Illinois, but what was then an almost unbroken expanse of wild forest and prairie land. The country pleased the adventurer, and he built a rude log-house upon the edge of a prairie bounded on one side by a wooded bluff, and watered by a small stream. It was a promising site for one of the great farms of the future, and even the first year of the settler's occupation saw an abundant crop of corn and the family safe from privation, so far as food was concerned.

Winter came, one of the severest ever known in the Northwest, and the only want felt in the household was for fuel. The settler discovered, too late, that he should have built his hut close to the wood, or have provided plenty of fuel before winter arrived. He had reasoned that it would be the easiest way to haul wood to the house upon the snow, and his plan would have been all right had he been able to do the work. Unfortunately, just as the bitter cold weather set in, the father broke his leg. He could do nothing, and upon the mother, who was herself ill, and upon the two little girls, devolved the hard task of supplying wood for the fire.

Many trips were made to the bluff, and many an apron full of dead twigs and bark was brought to the cabin, but the little girls, who had to do the work, nearly perished on their journeys. Finally came a great snow four or five feet in depth, and further trips were impossible. It seemed certain that the family, far removed from all help, must die of cold.

There was a rude cellar to the cabin and into this, for greater warmth, the family moved. A few twigs and pieces of bark remained at this time, as the result of the children's last trip to the bluff, and with these a fire was built upon the cellar floor. It burned well enough, but as the wood was consumed there was noticed a great deal of crackling and sputtering, and the ground beneath and around the fire turned red. It attracted the curious attention of the family, and it finally dawned upon them that the fire had been built upon a bed of coal. In digging for the cellar the pioneer had stumbled upon an outcropping coal seam, but he knew very little about coal and had not deemed the circumstance of any consequence. Now he changed his mind. There was no longer any danger of freezing to death.

The family moved up-stairs again and the two little girls became coal miners. They had only an old ax and a shovel, and they were small personages and not very strong, but they did not have a great deal of difficulty in getting out a sufficient number of pailfuls of coal a day to keep the fire going. Before spring came they had a big hole dug into the bottom and into the sides of the cellar. They made it quite a roomy place, probably the largest cellar in Illinois at that time.

The family prospered, and those two little girls are now middle-aged women and mothers of families who often laugh over the hard winter's experience of many years ago. And you can not tell either one of those two middle-aged, comfortable-looking women any thing about coal mining. They will tell you that they know all about it; that they, in fact, started the industry in this part of the country.—National Labor Tribune.

THE MALE FLIRT.

What He Is, Who He Is, and How He Makes His Conquests.

The male flirt is an individual not confined to our own days, nor yet even to our own century. From time immemorial this terrible yet fascinating person has scoured society just as the pirates and buccaneers of old are said to have scoured the seas with their powerful and irresistible charm. There is a weird attraction about him, a fearful joy at his approach, a horrible and unnatural delight at the bare mention of his name. Like the vampire of German fairy lore, he subjugates the senses and curdles the blood at one and the same time; he is delighted and yet alarming, enticing and yet appalling, all at once. The male flirt is the terror of mothers and the detestation of the whole race of elderly aunts and chaperones of all kinds. We have all in turn been warned against him, all cautioned to steel our hearts to his advances and to barricade the portals of our souls against his serpent-like depredations. Yet so contradictious and so foolish is the nature of woman that there is not one of us, young or old, who has not at some time or another of our lives fallen a willing victim to this seductively dangerous individual. The male flirt is made so neither by practice nor yet by education—he is born so; just as genius, or cooking, or mathematics is born with a man, so is flirting in its higher branches, implanted within him by nature. He is not often a handsome man, although he is invariably a pleasant one, and he is not, as a rule, popular among his fellow men. Fathers and brothers eye him with suspicion as something which they do not wholly comprehend, while husbands turn cold shoulders upon his blandishments, or at best treat him with freezing politeness. Men, in short, look upon him askance, and one and all unite in running him down—but, perhaps, that is only because they are jealous of him.—London Society.

CHANGE OF PASTURE.

Why It Benefits Not Only Live Stock But the Soil Also.

There is more good solid sense expressed in the old saying that "A change of pasture makes fat calves" than most people are apt to realize on a casual reading. Not only calves, but all descriptions of live-stock need for their highest thrift some little variety in the way of food, and the pastures, to maintain their best condition, need an occasional rest. Both stock and pastures are therefore benefited by a change. The stock coming into a fresh pasture find every variety of grass natural to it in full growth, and are able to fill themselves easily without too much exertion; and if the animals are of improved character and quality they never fail to give a good account of the luxuriant feed. There are some grasses in the pasture which will not stand very close grazing; the sun let in too directly upon their roots acts unfavorably and they seem incapable of making much growth until after they have progressed to about a certain stage. If constantly grazed the pasture is certain to lose its due proportion of such grasses. It is better, therefore, for both stock and grass that the pastures be divided into several lots, that one portion may recuperate while another is being used. If there is a difference in its productive capacity—some portions growing more luxuriant food than others—it is well to make the divisions with reference to that fact, for if there is not profitable food on any portion it is better that the stock should not be suffered to tramp around over it. Suitable divisions of the pasturage also enable the farmer to keep different descriptions of stock separate, which is quite desirable. Especially in periods of drought is it essential that the farmer should be able to manage the pasturage with the greatest care and intelligence, for there is danger of the permanent stand being injured in such portions as are too heavily burdened with stock at such a time.—Breeders' Gazette.

FOR THE NURSERY.

Allow Your Children to Develop Slowly and Naturally.

There is nothing more dangerous than the way some people try to stimulate the dormant intellect of infant children, often playing with the helpless baby and tossing it up till it trembles with excitement. Babies, like all little animals, should be left in a passive state. The most dangerous brain diseases to which infants are peculiarly subject are brought on by overfond parents, who refuse to let the faculties of the child remain in a half dormant state, as they should during the first year of life.

A nervous woman is a dangerous mother. It is better for an over-anxious woman to put her child in the hands of a conscientious nurse, who will bring it up by system and not by "maternal impulse," a beautiful thing for poets to dwell upon but a very uncertain thing in actual practice. No intelligent person would allow a choice puppy or fancy Angora kitten to be dangled and dosed as little children are by over-anxious mothers.

It seems very strange that sensible people should refuse to use their reason in bringing up babies. The child should be fed systematically, only at stated hours, every day it should be bathed at the same hour so that its long midday nap shall come at such a time that it shall have a period of wakefulness before sundown. Healthy children will sleep from sundown till sunrise, waking only once during the night to be fed if they are taken care of systematically. Infants under six months old should be fed every two hours from sunrise till sundown. Old wives' tales and old mothers' remedies are the most dangerous jack o'lanterns that the young mothers can follow.—N. Y. Tribune.

PERMANENT INKS.

Why Manufacturers Should State the Composition of Their Goods.

Ink-making has now become quite a high chemical art, and there so many kinds of ink in the market that a choice is rather puzzling. It is very desirable that manufacturers should state the composition of their inks—i. e., of the coloring matter which they contain. This might be done without betraying any trade secrets. We could then choose our ink according to its purpose. For documents of a permanent character, and subject to the possibility of intentional obliteration, the ink should contain more than one kind of coloring matter; as, for example, the old tannogallate of iron plus indigo or aniline black, and perhaps a little copper salt. No single chemical agent could bleach all of these, and neither paper nor parchment can stand a series of chemical solvents. The analine inks, now largely used, are of very questionable durability. It is uncertain whether they can endure the action of time alone. Supplemented with the old-fashioned iron salt, which has proved its durability, they are safe. It should always be understood that the indelibility of any ink largely depends upon the nature of the surface to which it is applied. The more absorbent the paper, the more difficult is its removal, as it penetrates below the surface of such paper. If the paper is highly glazed, by covering it with any kind of varnishing material, the possibility of removing the whole surface, varnish, ink and all, is increased.—Christian at Work.

Of these schools thirty-five supply board and clothing as well as instruction. The aggregate attendance is nearly 4,000. Most of the teachers are German and French.—Indianapolis Journal.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

Their Number in the United States Said to Be 648.

The principal public librarians of the United States assembled recently to confer and compare notes with each other. Many valuable and instructive papers were read, and public attention was called to the condition of our free libraries by the reports which were made. It is interesting to know that, every year, new free public libraries are being established in different places through the country. It is only a little more than thirty years since the idea of having such libraries, to which all the people might, without paying any thing, have free access, took practical form.

The first free public library in the United States was that at Boston which is now one of the largest and most valuable collection of books and periodicals in the land. The example thus set by Boston has been followed by many cities and towns, especially in New England. Some of the towns have erected expensive and handsome buildings for their libraries, as if proud of them. The total number of public libraries in the United States is said to be six hundred and forty-eight.

These libraries have been established in two ways. They are supported either from generous endowments made for the purpose by rich and public-spirited private citizens, or they are carried on by sums voted yearly in their behalf by the city or town governments. Sometimes they derive their support from both sources. To most of the public libraries, too, reading-rooms are attached, to which free access is given, where young and old may sit and peruse the periodicals and magazines. The benefit conferred upon a community by a free public library can scarcely be overestimated. "Reading," says Lord Bacon, "maketh a full man." The libraries, as a means of general education, are scarcely less important than the schools. The books on their shelves are generally carefully selected, so that the young who resort to them do not often fall into the danger of reading injurious literature; yet they afford a great variety, both for instruction and for amusement. It is to be hoped that public libraries will rapidly increase throughout the country, and that in time no American city or town will be without one.—Youth's Companion.

County Official Paper.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28.....1888

There appears to be no limit to th generosity of Senator Hoar; he proposes to give the old soldiers a pension of one cent per day for each day of service during the war. A soldier who served a year would get a yearly pension of three dollars and sixty-five cents, with one cent added for leap years. In the interests of sound economy the bill of the Massachusetts Senator should be amended A much less expensive way to care for soldiers in old age would be to give to each a bottle containing a piece of limburger cheese; then the old vet. could rub his bread—should he have any—on the bottle and take a whiff of the cheese at each meal. This provision would last as long as the old soldier, and would get stronger as he got weaker. Another advantage of this plan would be that we could have the English plan of hereditary pensions, and that, too, without any additional cost. The law could provide that on the death of the veteran the bottle and cheese should go to the nearest male heir, and thus prove to coming generations that a Republic—Massachusetts— is not ungrateful.

In Ireland venerable clergymen, Members of Parliament and editors of newspapers are sent to jail like pickpockets and burglars. Their offense is peaceful opposition to cruel tyrrany. In the Highlands of Scotland and the people are being driven away from the homes of their fathers as if they were wolves or other dangerous wild animals that must be got rid of. All this is the work of a proud aristocracy and of selfish rich men. A day of wrath is sure to come when there will be sore need of the gallant Highlanders who have won victories for England in all parts of the world, and when the gross folly will be seen of the men who have made enemies of the Irish race. Many an Irish heart would throb with ecstasy if a chance were given for another Fontenoy. "Remember Limerick" would be answered with as hearty a cheer as burst from "Clare's Dragoons" one hundred and forty-three years ago. Yet it is not the great body of the English people, but the nobles and the great landlords who, by their desperate clinging to feudal privileges and feudal tyrrany keep alive the old hatreds by a constant infliction of new injuries.

The following press dispatch was sent from New York last Saturday:

"H. M. Yerington, President of the Carson & Colorado railroad, and his associates, D. O. Mills, Nicholas Luning and other capitalists, have just concluded an arrangement with Prof. Thomas M. Chatard, of the United States Geological Survey, to take in charge their soda works at Owens Valley, Inyo county. Mr. Chatard was sent last summer to examine soda deposits throughout the west, as he is considered a leading authority on this and similar questions. He has been induced by this syndicate to resign his position under the Government and he will leave for the west about the first of March. The scheme of these capitalists is one of the most stupendous ever undertaken in the west. They propose diverting the waters of Owens River, allowing the lake to dry out, and carrying the water beyond the lake into Death Valley, thus making a garden of the most desolate wilderness of the West, and opening up thousands of acres for settlement. They then propose to extend the Carson & Colorado narrow gauge railroad to a connection with the Atlantic & Pacific, in this manner making a profitable railroad out of what has long been locally designated as an expensive and useless 'jerkwater.'"

Death Valley is about one hundred miles to the east of Owens Lake with two or three ranges of mountains between. Perhaps the New York press agent contemplates training the pelicans, which are sometimes plentiful at the lake, to drain the lake by carrying the water in their bills over the mountains to Death Valley. The project of draining the lake is entirely practicable, however, by ordinary means. The lake is about twenty one miles in extreme length by twelve wide; careful soundings give the greatest depth as being 80 feet. Very little water flows into the lake other than Owens river. In the valley are at least three hundred thousand acres of land, all of which may be irrigated from the river. The southern boundary of the lake is formed by a low bank, apparently all of sand, which has been thrown across the valley in comparatively recent times. South from this sand bank the valley is narrower, but extends a distance of about one hundred miles, to the boundaries of the Mojave Desert. All along this valley the old river bed is very plainly marked; the rocks in many places showing the high and low water marks, and gravelly bars and little ridges of sand indicating where the waters once flowed. What waters should remain in Owens river after all that should be needed for irrigating the lands of Owens Valley should be taken out could very easily be conveyed over the sand ridge south of the lake and let flow into the valley beyond, where there is more than enough land to require it all for irrigation. Canals now in course of construction in Owens Valley would if continued on south, carry the water over the ridge referred to. The river water once disposed of the lake would very soon disappear. The annual evaporation at the lake is five feet, and in two years most of the whole body of the water would be gone, as the lake is all very shallow except a narrow strip, presumably the old river bed. During the past three years a good deal of soda has been gathered at the lake. Shallow ponds have been dug near the edge of the water; these were filled by pumping, the water allowed to evaporate and the soda gathered up. This is still going on.

CONSTRUCTING THE PANAMA CANAL

What a Returned Employe Says of the Extravagance and Mismanagement.

Mr. A. P. Smith, of Salem, who for the past fifteen years has lived in South America, and more recently has been employed as an engineer by the Panama Canal company, has just returned from Aspinwall, and tells an interesting story in regard to the method of prosecuting the work on the great De Lesseps canal.

"I was making my way home from Cathagenia," said he to a reporter, "but, attracted by the financial inducements offered by the Panama company, I went to Aspinwall, and immediately secured employment as an engineer in that city. I remained a number of weeks, and should probably be there to-day, but that I fell a victim to the yellow fever, and on my recovery, finding that I could not stand the climate, I packed my chattels for home. During my stay I thoroughly inspected the canal, walking its entire length of fifty-four miles.

"At present the outlook is bad, very bad. A great deal of money is being wasted, and it would almost seem as if it were culpably wasted. That portion of the canal thus far completed is at the eastern end, and is a stretch about eleven miles long. Here the country is low and flat, the banks rising scarcely six feet on an average above high water mark, and the land is mostly of a clay formation. Through a country of this kind a cut eighty feet in width has already been made for a distance, as I have stated, of eleven miles. While forests have been cleared away, and other cuts have been made at various points along the fifty-four-mile line of the proposed canal, yet little more than the eleven miles already referred to has been accomplished, for reasons which I will make clear to you later on. For another half-dozen miles the diggers and dredgers will have comparatively easy work, because, for about that distance, the general character of the soil is similar to that already encountered. But harder work remains behind. About seventeen miles from the coast foot hills will be encountered, and the great mountain chain which runs through the continent from Alaska to Patagonia, is just beyond. Of course, that point has been selected for the bed of the canal where the mountains are the lowest, but cuts of 500 feet—and there will have to be several such—are no trifling matter, and can not be accomplished without great expense and considerable time. On every hand may be seen evidences of mismanagement and gross extravagance. Money is literally thrown away, and signs of "jobs" are more plentiful than mosquitoes in July. Much of the work is let out by contract, and all sorts and kinds of people secure the contracts."

"What sort of men are the employes?"

"The very scum of the earth," replied Mr. Smith. "Most of them are blacks, who recieve $2 per day, equivalent to something like $1.60 in our money. This means affluence to these men, and all higher grades of labor are paid proportionately. But the money is the only possible inducement, and the wages must necessarily be high to attract men to a region which will in all probability prove fatal to them if they remain there long. So the men and the women who come are the very lowest and vilest. Convicts and outlaws and prostitutes make up a large percentage of the sojourners there, and murder and arson are common. Police regulations are a farce, and justice is almost impossible to obtain."—Boston Herald Interview.

A PLEASURE CITY BY THE SEA.

Where a Perpetual Picnic Prevails—Amusements Found at Brighton.

To-day finds me down at Coney Island, this magical city of pleasure by the sea. Here the world seems all holiday time. A perpetual picnic prevails, and it is difficult to conceive of care. In the first place, it is a perfect day. Nature never flattered a fairer leaf from the folds of her book. The shadows on the sea are as varied as a Florentine mosaic. The purple of a pansy sway off there where the sun is clouded, while here at our feet the breakers fringe the golden sands with silver. A gleam of sapphire, like the bluest break in a showery sky, has fallen athwart the main distance, and through it a white-winged boat, full-sailed, goes courtseying down the wind. A haze hangs over all, like the mist that rises from a meadow at dawn, and the shadowy domes and towers of far-off Rockaway breaks through like a city in the air.

It is inconceivable that New York should have been so slow to appropriate and use this beautiful island. For years and years this strip of sea-girt sand might as well have lain in mid ocean as here. A few roughs came down now and then and perpetrated dark deeds that gave a flavor of disrepute to the island. Nobody who thought anything either of reputation or pocket-book ever came here in those days. Now, half-hour boats and numerous lines of cars bring down all New York. Many come by private conveyance over the smooth and beautiful boulevard leading from the city to the very margin of the sea.

Brighton at its loveliest, in the full tide of the season, can not excel this wonderland of pleasure. There is everything of which folly ever dreamed of in the line of amusement here. Are you fond of riding the fleet-footed ostrich, the gentle cow, the domestic rooster, or the roaring lion of the desert, to say nothing of the stately giraffe, and the mettlesome swan? Here you have your chance in the "merry-go-round." Only 5 cents, and you can mount any one of these animals, richly caparisoned, and fly around a ring to the inspiring strains of a brass band.

If you want to spin like a rocket through the air, if you want to hold your hat while your back hair falls off and in your ears the elements of wind and fire make merry, ride down the "switch-back." You take a seat at the top of the inclined plane—you flash down the plane like a paper through a printing press; you skim up another like a swallow on the wing; you dart down again like a falling star and up again like a kerosene-fed flame, and your ride is accomplished. For another 5 cents you mount the elephant's back and indulge in light refreshments in different parts of the body. I believe they serve lemonade in one of his ears, and in the mysterious recesses of his inside you can buy caramels and sweet cakes. Should you care for milk, several stuffed cows stand about under gay canopies. Milk is surreptitiously introduced through a hole in the back, a little behind the ear, and a man draws it fresh from the udders and presents it with a wink of superhuman cunning. Donkeys and horses are on hire, whereon you can canter over the sands and into the sea if you like. Little children are playing all about, thicker than sand-fleas, and the whole scene is one of perfectly unalloyed rapture and content.—"Amber" in Chicago Journal.

TAKE SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

For all Diseases of the Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Spleen.

This purely vegetable preparation, now so celebrated as a Family Medicine, originated in the South in 1828. It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. SATURDAY, JANUARY 28 .....1888

MARRIED.

HOLLAND—DEARBORN—At Independence, January 26, 1888, by Hon. John A. Hannah, James W. Holland and Miss Henrietta Dearborn, both of Lone Pine.

Diptheria is prevalent at Los Angeles.

Mr. R. P. Hessian, of Big Pine was in town during the week.

Rev. T. E. Sisson will preach at Lone Pine on Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m.

John Williams, a well known miner, died at Gold Hill on Thursday of last week.

The weather is delightful; farm work is going on all over the south end of the valley.

Dr. Terrill, a prominent physician of San Francisco, died of small-pox on Friday last.

Sunday School at the M. E. Church at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. No evening service at the church.

George Lewis came up from Keeler on Thursday morning to take part in the dramatic entertainment.

District Attorney Forbes returned from Bishop Creek on Thursday. He had been up there several days.

The Reno Gazette says that on last Saturday night at Elko, Nevada, the thermometer registered 61° below zero.

A contract is let for the grading of a railroad from Nadeau Junction, near Los Angeles to Alamitos Bay and Long Beach.

Kerosene lamps should not be left burning in rooms where children are sleeping; it is alleged that the fumes cause diptheria.

A strong effort will be made to have a bill passed by Congress that will put a stop to the enormous frauds committed by timber land thieves.

The water main leading to Candelaria was frozen up during the cold snap; there was no water to run the mill and work stopped for a time.

Mr. John Baxter began plowing last Tuesday; the ground is in fine condition. Just before Christmas he sowed wheat and it is now making fine growth.

The Los Angeles papers say that some tender sub-tropical plants in the gardens of the city were injured by the frosts but that the orange trees show no sign of damage.

John L. Sullivan is flinging the tail of his coat around "quite promiscuous like" in England, but not a bruiser among them shows the least inclination to put his toe upon it.

Mrs. Garfield, mother of the murdered President, died at the home of her daughter-in-law, Mrs. James A. Garfield, last Saturday morning. The old lady was aged 86 years.

Last Sunday a young Indian was frozen to death at Toano, Nevada. This is the only case of an Indian being killed by cold during the late storms that has yet been reported.

Mr. Morrow, Congressman from San Francisco, is confident the Committee on Foreign Affairs will agree upon a favorable report to the House upon the Chinese exclusion bill.

Another young couple have comitted matrimny; Mr. James Holland was united in marriage last Thursday to Miss Nettie Dearborn. They will make their home in Lone Pine.

The report of the signal service observer at Keeler gives the greatest degree of cold in December at 23 degrees above zero, nine degrees below the freezing point; the lowest for the year was 22° above zero.

Flour from Minnesota and chickens from Missouri are being shipped to Los Angeles. It is a queer business proceeding where flour is shipped out of the State at San Francisco and brought into it at Los Angeles.

A few days of enforced idleness was caused by the late cold weather on the East Side and Stevens Canals. During the whole of this week however, work has been going on vigorously and no further delay to the work is likely to be caused by bad weather.

The owners of the Manhattan mine, at Austin Nevada, have paid all claims against the property and will resume work on the mine. John L. Beveridge, former Governor of Illinois, went to Austin and paid up all of the indebtedness, amounting to about $53,000.

The gross receipts of the post office at Los Angeles increased between December 31, 1886 and September 30, 1887, from $56,487 to $80,860. At Pasadena during the same time the increase was from $6,249 to $12,039, and at San Diego from $15,671 to $27,491.

Very great improvements have been made of late years in breeding cattle. Records show that in 1830 the average weight of beef cattle was 800 pounds gross. Now the Reno Gazette says the average beef steer sold from Nevada ranges is not considered choice unless it tips the beam at 1,400.

The recent storm was rough on the people of Darwin. The water pipes were frozen up and burst and water had to be hauled eight miles. The snow was so deep on the mountains that fuel could not be got only as a little was hauled, twenty-four miles, from Keeler. This was about as rough an experience as the Darwinites have ever had.

In California the amount of land claimed under the Acts relating to swamp and overflowed lands is 1,887,187 acres. Of this amount patents have been issued for 1,465,520 acres. Attempts have been made to get patents for a great deal of land that was found upon examinatton by Government agents to be dry and not subject to such entry.

When the snow storm set in a few weeks ago Schober's team was at Panamint. The snow fell so deep on the mountain pass west from Panamint Valley that the horses could not be got out; they were therefore turned loose in the valley to shift for themselves and the men made their way in safety to Darwin. There is plenty of grass and water in the valley and the animals will no doubt be found in good order when the owner can get at them.

Lookout Mines.

Fitzgerald and Gunn have leased the Minietta mine to Clinton and McGovern for a term of six months. The lessees have already opened up a fine body of ore in what is known as the "Coburn cut" in the mine. They will soon be included in the list of shippers. They have five men employed.

That portion of the Hearst mine known as the three hundred foot ore body, in the main tunnel, has been leased by Fitzgerald to John Curran.

Fitzgerald has leased the Lava Beds mine to Frank Cox for five months. Cox is working three men beside himself in the mine.

On the first Monday of the present month Fitzgerald began sinking on one of his claims called the Kentuck. Eight days afterward the men were taking out two tons of ore each day. Three eight hour shifts are now working, and with but two men on each shift the yield is three and a half tons daily. The average value of the ore is 88 ounces silver per ton and 58 per cent. lead. A patent hoisting windlass is being put up and a track laid for the ore cars; when these improvements are completed the ore shipments will average about twenty tons each week. The Kentuck is in a very rough country; it cost Mr. Fitzgerald $470 to make a trail 890 feet long to the mouth of the shaft. All the indications are favorable for finding a big ore body in the Kentuck mine.

Hurt.

Last Sunday Jim Connor was hurt in a mine at Cerro Gordo. He was going along a plank pushing a wheel barrow when he missed his footing and fell a distance of about twenty-five feet. Word was sent to Keeler and Mr. T. C. Boland at once telegraphed to Independence for Dr. Woodin. In the mean time Connor was conveyed down to Keeler; but the Doctor reached there before him, having driven the distance of thirty-two miles in a litttle over four hours. Connor's hurts were found to be painful but not serious and the Doctor thinks he will be around all right in a few weeks.

Wedding.

A wedding is to come off at Lone Pine on Sunday evening at 8 o clock. Miss Ida Adams and Mr. Stephen Decker are to be married at the residence of Mrs. McCall, mother of the bride. Rev. T. E. Sisson, of Independence is expected to perform the ceremony. A large number of invitations have been issued to attend the wedding.

At the Mount Diablo mine seventy men are at work and at the Georgene forty are employed. These are the only mines now working at Candelaria.

At Bishop Creek last Saturday an election was had on the question of issuing bonds to build a new school house. The vote in favor of the bonds was nearly unanimous. This is highly creditable to the voters.

There is quite a buzzing down about the shores of Owens lake. The rumors of great things to be done in drying up the lake and gathering the soda is making many people eager to get a finger in the pie.

There is to be a grand celebration over in Merced county next Wednesday, the occasion being the completion of a big canal to convey water for irrigating Merced plains. The Governor has accepted an invitation to attend.

The brass band at Independence has a new leader. His name is John Rosewaren; he came down from Candelaria on Wednesday. Mr. Rosewaren was a member of the noted Eureka band, in Plumas county, up till last June. He is a musician of long experience and will undoubtedly prove an able leader.

Ed Rose got a severe hurt last Tuesday. He was working with a team and scraper on the East Side Canal; the scraper met an obstruction and Ed, having a hold on it at the instant, was pitched headlong and fell with his knee on a sharp stone. A very severe cut and bruise was the result; it is not yet certain if the knee cap is broken or not; should the bone be broken the young man is liable to be a cripple for life.

There will be a large falling off of the vote of Mono county at the next election. The Bridgeport Chronicle-Union says of those remaining whose politics are known 311 are Republicans and 176 Democrats; 169 are unknown or doubtful. Allowing three-fourths of the unknown to vote the Democratic ticket the Republican majority of the county would be 78. Bodie shows a great falling off. Autelope, Benton and Bridgeport will have an increase of votes.

No more Chinese cooking at Levy's hotel. A white cook is employed and a good one, too. Soup, fish, beef, mutton, ham; roast, boiled and fried, don't all taste alike now; pies are no longer poultices done up in covers made of old boot legs; coffee is no longer an ill tasting dose, like dirty water dipped from a horse pond, and tea is served fragrant and refreshing; all of which improvements will be appreciated by the guests of Mr. Levy.

A petition has been presented to Congress from California salt manufacturers asking that no reduction be made on the tariff on salt. Large investments of money have been made in salt works in this State; a large number of men are employed and salt is shipped to consumers at very low rates. To reduce the tariff would be to shut down the works, destroy their value, throw workmen out of employment, benefit foreigners and yet not reduce the price of salt to consumers.

One of the greatest irrigation schemes ever undertaken is that now being worked up by J. W. Shanklin, formerly Surveyor-General of this State. The plan is to take water from the Colorado river a short distance below Yuma and convey it upon the Colorado Desert. An immense area of land can thus be brought under cultivation. Part of the plan contemplates the formation of several large ponds or lakes in the lower parts of the desert, and these, it is expected, would modify the climate, which is now very dry and hot. The surveys for the great canal that will be required are already made.

Black Bart, Po-8, the noted stage robber was released from San Quentin Prison last Saturday after being confined five years. C. E. Barton is the under which he goes, but this is assumed and even the police do not appear to know his true name. He was convicted under the name of Charles E. Bolles. Bart says he has a wife and three daughters who are grown up and are well educated. During the six years that he is known to have been committing robberies it is estimated that his plunder averaged six thousand dollars a year. He says he will never commit another robberv. perhaps he is reformed enough not to write any more "poetry."

Fruit for Market.

In planting fruit trees it is very great importance to consider the qualities that make fruit most suitable to marketing. A correspondent writing to the Rural Press says: "In the shipments East last year the cling peach brought the highest price in the market, which on account of its good keeping qualities arrived at destination in good condition. As a drying peach the cling, because of its keeping in good condition when ripe on the tree, gives time to handle, and, the flesh being firmer, does not lose so much in drying.

"With the pitters now in use the cling is as easily handled as the free, and holds better on the fork to pare. In paring the peach to dry there is not so much loss in weight as many suppose. It does not require so much drying as the unpared, and when so pared and evaporated brings double the price in the market.

Many varieties of yellow cling are sold under the name of Orange and Lemon cling, both in the local and Eastern markets. A number of the California seedlings sold as such are superior to either and many other of the old time standard varieties, which are the following, viz.: Edwards' Cling, also called the California Cling, Day's Yellow Cling, Tuscan Cling, Albright Cling, Sellers' Cling, French Cling and McDavit's Cling, all fine yellow peaches of fine quality. Mr. McDavit, of Placer county, had in his crop of that name, in 1886, six peaches that weighed nine pounds. George's Late Cling and Winters' Cling are both superior white peaches, ripening in September and both good shippers. The Winters Cling is a favorite canning peach. I refer to nurserymen's catalogue for description of varieties named.

Delinquent Tax List

Many more cases of delinquent taxes will be published this year than were last year. The increase will be on a great many desert land locations made up to the beginning of last March. Most of these locations were made by non-residents of the county and very few such have paid taxes on lands located by them. Of the land owners and locators, residents of the county, a less number than ever before will be published as delinquent, and the total amount of the delinquent taxes among these will be a very small percentage of the total taxes of the county.

Passenger Rates.

The Southern Pacific Company has established rates as follows for passengers. They apply from San Francisco. To Boston, unlimited, $96 70; first-class, $93; mixed, $68; second class, $64 50. To New York, unlimited, $95 30; first-class, $91; mixed, $66; second-class, 62 50. To Washington, unlimited, $92 60; first-class, $87-75; mixed, $62 85; second-class, $59.

New Shop Open.

The new blacksmithshop of W. F. Matlack will be open for business next week. The shop is on a very convenient location on the corner of the street leading to the railroad depot; it is well provided with new tools and machinery. Mr. Matlack intends building a wagon shop in connection with the blacksmithshop.

A Unique Cyclopaedia.

An extremely valuable Cyclopaedia, and of very great popular interest is "Alden's Cyclopedia of Universal Literature," Volume II of which is here noticed. Novel in plan and novel in form, at once beautiful and convenient, and at a price low even compared with Mr. Alden's always low prices, this volume gives in its nearly 500 pages biographical sketches of one hundred and eleven prominent authors, with characteristic selections from their writings. The following authors among others appear in this volume: Audubon, St. Augustine, D'Auvergne, Bacon, Balzac, Bancroft, Banin, Barbauld, Beaumont, Beecher (several of the name), Bentham, Bion, Björnson, Black (William), Blackstone, Blessington (Countess of), and Boccaccio; thus representing nearly all ages and all nations in this volume—American, English, French, German, Italian, Greek, Latin, Swedish Portuguese, Scotch, Dutch, Irish, Norwegian and Danish authors—from the period 280 B. C. to A. D. 1886. The literary and mechanical workmanship are both of a high order. The work is really one that ought to find a place in every home library; it offers a fund of entertainment and instruction that will prove well nigh inexhaustible. The price, only 50 cents a volume, makes its possession possible to nearly every school boy. The work is also published in parts 160 pages each (exchangeable at any time for bound volumes), which are sold at 10 cents each. Every reader of this notice ought to get at least a specimen part for examination. JOHN B. ALDEN, publisher, 393 Pearl street, New York.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.
JOHN C. EVANS, SPOOTLAND, MO., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take as much labor off men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house, if they had to take the feathers from under their wife and baldes to pay for it."
JOHN R. DODGE, JR., jeweler, NORMAL, ILL., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. Ist. It is the best machine ever invented by man. 2d. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. 3d. If you run short, you can not buy ours for $1000."
I will ship a sample to that, desiring an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best washer in the world for saving labor, clothes and soap. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.

Reliable Recipes for Cooked and Uncooked French Creams.

Of the French creams there are two kinds—the cooked and uncooked. The former is the more economical when eggs are scarce, and to my mind it is the more delicious, but I will give both. For the first, put two cupfuls of granulated sugar and half a cupful of boiling water into a granite or porcelain basin, and let it boil exactly ten minutes. Take from the stove, pour it into a China bowl, flavor to taste, and beat rapidly with a spoon until it becomes a creamy paste. Roll it into little balls, to be covered with melted chocolate, used with fruit or in any of the ways given below. If it gets too stiff and cold, set the bowl in a pan of boiling water, which will keep it so that you can mold it.

For the uncooked cream, break the whites of two eggs into a bowl, add an exactly equal measure of cold water, and stir in powdered sugar until you have it stiff enough to be molded into shape by the fingers. Flavor with any essence you like.

Now for the varieties to be made with either of these as a foundation. Mold some of the cream into little balls half an inch in diameter, and clap on either side the half of an English walnut. Have ready some chocolate melted in a bowl set over a boiling tea kettle, and after these little balls of cream are dry, stick a long pin into them and dip in the melted chocolate, and you have most delicious chocolate creams. Roll them in until thoroughly coated. They may also be dipped in the chocolate after putting the nuts on, or the cream may be colored with a few drops of cochineal. Another variety is given by adding the juice of an orange or lemon to the cream, and, as it thins somewhat, stir in more sugar. For cream figs, tear the fig in two, leaving it joined at the stem end; insert an oblong piece of the cream, and press the fig together at the bottom. Serve the dates in the same way. Pineapple, or any kind of preserved fruit, may be drained from the sirup, cut into dice and rolled in the cream. A novel candy is made by molding some of this cream into a flat bar; spread with any kind of jelly that is so stiff that it can be cut with a knife, and put on another layer of cream.

A most delightful nut candy is made by stirring several kinds of chopped nuts into the cream, then make into squares or bars, and wrap in waxed paper if it is to be kept for any length of time. Seeded raisins, figs and citron, chopped fine, makes a fruit mixture that can be used in the same way. The cream may be flavored, and at the same time colored brown, by stirring in melted chocolate. In making the boiled candies, they must be allowed to boil fast and hard.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

A Constant Reminder.

"Why do you wear that nickel on your watch chain?" asked a city hall attache of a milkman who was after a board of health permit to peddle cow juice. "I wear it as a reminder to get even with one of my customers, was the answer. "Over a year ago I took that nickel, which was then beautifully gold-plated, as a five dollar gold piece in payment of a bill. As soon as I detected the fraud I took it back to the woman who passed it on me, but she refused to make it good. So I attached it to my watch-chain and kept on supplying her with milk as though nothing had happened. But now every day I make her quart one-fourth water and once a week I credit her with one-fourth the amount of her milk bill in a book which I keep for that purpose. When the sum total standing to her credit is $4 95 she shall have pure milk once more, and not until then. She knows the milk is watered, but whenever she shows an inclination to complain I handle the nickel and say that my milk is as 'pure as gold.' That settles it."—Buffalo Express.

Doctors and Practical Hygiene.

The men and women in the medical profession are, or should be, most interested in all branches of practical hygiene and sanitation. Their medical education eminently fits them for considering the best means of promoting health, and of avoiding all things which have a tendency to destroy it.

But how many doctors are there today who visit the families in their charge, weekly or monthly, and examine into the conditions which surround them, whether or not these tend toward health or disease? That this is not more frequently done is sometimes not the physician's fault, yet too often his or her teaching could prevent the illness which comes.

Most physicians do not give instructions that last beyond the given prescription for some certain malady. They do not see their duty plain to extend care before the advent of disease, and when danger is over their work is done. It is perhaps not easy to prevent that which brings doctors and their families their bread and butter. One of Will Carleton's humorous ballads is about the doctor who cured the deacon's wife by "God's own remedies, sun, light and air," and so lost his fee; after which he concluded that if called to attend that woman again she should have medicine made by men.—Annals of Hygiene.

The Prize Fighters' Methods.

There are still a number of good fighters, men who fight "with their heads," as they call it; meaning thereby not that they butt like rams or negros, but that they bring the mind to the assistance of the body; they bring to the play of the arm something of the judgment, finesse and strategy that are practiced by eminent professors of the small sword. But these men are exceptional.

The majority of prize fighters have no other idea of boxing than simply to butcher their opponent. The process is performed in two movements. First you rush your man; that is, you run at him, striking right and left, until you have him rattled, and then, at a moment when his action is controlled rather by his physical sensation than by his scientific training, you bring in your round hander on his jugular and knock him out. That is what glove fighting in four rounds amounts to; and the Marquis of Queensberry has done more to degrade the ring than any mere bruiser who ever fought.—Julian Hawthorne in Cosmopolitan.

MENDING BROKEN BRIC-A-BRAC.

Specialists Who Devote Their Time to Patching and Restoring.

New York abounds as thoroughly in queer corners, people and occupations as any city of its size in the world. Most of these oddities, however, possess little value outside of the purely picturesque, and depend for even that on individual taste. A few are quite reasonable. Among the latter may be classed a peculiar industry not yet of a size to admit of its being troubled much by the state of the labor market. This calling is entirely in the hands of a few wide awake Swiss, whose ateliers are scattered over the uptown business portions of the city, and is dignified by the title of "artistic repairing."

One of the best known and busiest of their number was, when called upon, engaged on just such a task. "We have," he said, "very few shop secrets because our trade is entirely one of delicacy and skill and involves such a variety of knacks that we have little fear of competition. There is absolutely no restriction as to the nature of the article brought to us for repair, or as to the amount of damage it has sustained, to lie within our ability to restore it. Most of our patrons being extremely wealthy, we are trusted daily with the rarest and most costly articles, which would never be placed in the hands of inexperienced workmen, so that what we do is both expensive and in keeping with the elegance of the article to be mended.

"You can judge of the extent of our operations somewhat when I tell you that I am a watchmaker, cabinetmaker, painter in oil and water colors, carver of wood, marble and ivory, modeler in clay, a musician and chemist, all combined. In any of these branches I should probably prove a distinguished failure alongside of men who have devoted a lifetime to the particular one, but in Geneva where I was educated, we are taught to be careful, and I have learned enough and practiced long enough to be able to perform successfully the essential part of my business, which is to copy faithfully and naturally whatever is set before me. This porcelain vase at which I am now at work is a very ordinary job. I received it in sixty-four pieces, each piece, calculating by the original value of jar, having cost something above $2. This makes it slightly worth repairing.

"The soundest and largest portion was the bottom, which was about three times as thick as the rest and, of course, stood the fall better. In the course of an hour's search I managed to find a little section that fitted exactly to a nick in the first. This was securely fastened in its place with cement and set away to harden. It is impossible at this stage of proceedings to put on more than one piece at a time. Other work is disposed of and in course of time another fragment added to the originals, then a fourth and fifth, and so on. The vase has gradually grown in this way to its original proportions. As nothing but the finest and whitest cement is used, the dirty streaking that characterizes badly mended china is avoided. However, several of the broken bits have been lost and some have crumbled so fine as to be unavailable. This leaves an ugly hole in the side, a large nick in the rim and completely ruins a beautiful painted bouquet. I beat a stick of a certain chalk substance of my own invention and carefully fill in the gaps yet left. With a fine steel spatula the material is pared down even on both sides, introduced into the nicks and is carefully molded into the delicate curl of the rim, which it imitates exactly. In one hour these additions are firmly set and almost as hard as the original material. With palette in hand they are treated by me to several coats of oil color of exactly the same tint as the porcelain. The roses are restored by painting the broking parts in on the new surface, and the lines of cement covered up in the same way. A coat or two of isinglass varnish and—well—there is a vase that cost $125, in which the sharpest eye would fail to detect a flaw and although the outer coat of varnish might feel a little funny to the fingers of a connoisseur.

"Frequently cabinets of rare and expensive woods are sent to us which by some fatality have been split, rotted or stepped of certain parts of the ornamentation. We cut away the damaged parts, restore the same variety of wood or a perfect imitation thereof, and carve it to match. I have now on hand a Japanese cabinet, the top edges of which were ornamented with a row of little ivory figures like chessmen, half of which were gone. I am carving out exact duplicates of every one to replace their fellows, and expect to make a very creditable job of it. Marble statuary, terra cotta and other ornaments we rejoin if broken, and old well molded replicas of missing portions, if there are such. We clean arms and armor for collectors, which is in itself a trade, as the dirt and rust must be removed with acids without affecting the blackness and oxidation of the metal which guarantee the antiquity. The slightest sign of polish or repair would be an irreparable damage. For armor, too, we construct fearful and wonderful warriors, stuffed with straw and with wax heads, on which the iron harness is riveted as 'in days of old, when knights were bold.' But somehow these seem pretty tame.

"Our most important work has to do with a certain class of mechanical matters. We study out the wants of old fashioned clock movements which are unintelligible to the modern horologist. Some of these are entirely of wood, wheels and pinions alike. We make wooden works for the old cases, and superintend the making of cases for old movements. The various sets of chimes and musical wonders concealed in old foreign clocks are familiar to us, where it would require weeks of examination for most people to comprehend them. The fine points of these articles must be leared abroad, so that we rank as experts in this line."—New York Star.

One Way of Telling Time.

There is one way of telling time that is peculiar to city life, and that is by the people you meet on the street. There are people who quit work at 5 o'clock in the morning, those who go to work at 6, and so on. When you get along into the later hours, such as 9, 10 and 11, you will find people that come down street at these hours. It is so in the afternoon and evening. One makes many acquaintances of this kind too. I know a young man who is almost constantly on the street, shifting from one place to another, and he has many of these acquaintances, but instead of telling the time by them he uses the hour to find his men. Habit is a queer thing in this world, and many people who boast of irregularity are more regular than they are aware of.—Buffalo News.

A Difficult Order to Fill.

An old lady came into a Washington street book store the other day with an order which was rather difficult to fill. She said to the clerk at the counter;

"Do you keep Bibles?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Well, I want a small pocket Bible in very large print!"—Boston Transcript.

A PIN.

Oh, I know a certain woman who is reckoned with the good,
But she fills me with more terror than a raging lion would.
The little chills run up and down my spine whene'er we meet,
Though she seems a gentle creature and she's very trim and neat.

And she has a thousand virtues and not one acknowledged sin,
But she is the sort of person you could liken to a pin.
And she pricks you, and she sticks you, in a way that can't be said—
When you seek for what has hurt you, why, you cannot find the head.

But see fills you with discomfort and exasperat-ing pain—
If anybody asks you why, you really can't explain.
A pin is such a tiny thing—of that there is no doubt—
Yet, when it's sticking in your flesh, you're wretched till it's out!

She is wonderfully observing—when she meets a pretty girl
She is always sure to tell her if her "bang" is out of curl.
And she is so sympathetic: to her friend, who's much admired,
She is often heard remarking, "Dear, you look so worn and tired!"

And she is a careful critic, for on yesterday she eyed
The new dress I was airing with a woman's natural pride,
And she said, "Oh, how becoming;" and then softly added, "it
Is really a misfortune that the basque is such a fit."

Then she said, "If you had heard me yesterevo,
I'm sure, my friend,
You would say I am a champion who knows how to defend."
And she left me with the feeling—most unpleasant, I aver—
That the whole world would despise me if it had not been for her.

Whenever I encounter her, in such a nameless way
She gives me the impression I am at my worst that day.
And the hat that was imported (and that cost me half a sonnet)
With just once glance from her round eyes becomes a Bowery bonnet.

She is always bright and smiling, sharp and shining for a thrust—
Use does not seem to blunt her point, nor does she gather rust.
Oh! I wish some hapless specimen of mankind would begin
To tidy up the world for me, by picking up this pin.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox in The Century.

What He Had in His Basket.

He was one of those long, thin, dried up fellows, with a parchment skin and sharp eyes, and a sharp nose, who are always prying into things. It was on the Sausalito boat, and a fellow came on board with a basket and sat down near him. There was something very important in the basket, for the fellow kept peering in all the time and looking to see if the lid was securely fastened. The sharp nosed man began to feel an interest, and his curiosity kept rising higher and higher, until when the fellow had peeped into the basket for the fiftieth time he couldn't stand it any longer.

"I beg your pardon, but you're so interested in that basket you really excite me. What have you got in it?"

The fellow looked at him a moment.

"I'll tell you, certainly. You won't give it away?"

"I give you my word."

"Well, it's a mongaroo."

"A mongaroo! And what is a mongaroo?"

"You don't know what a mongaroo is? A mongaroo is an animal found in Africa that lives entirely on snakes."

"And how are you going to get snakes for it to eat?"

"Oh, you see I'm taking it to my brother. He's a confirmed drinker, and"——

"But I don't see"——

"Well, he's always seeing snakes and I'm going to"——

"But how can this animal live on imaginary snakes?"

"Oh, this is an imaginary mongaroo."

Then the sharp nosed man went into the cabin and sat down opposite a girl who is supposed to be in Sausalito for change of air, but comes over here four days out of the week.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Getting Exercise.

A gentleman who made the passage from England to this country in the days before steamships were run drew out a perfectly characteristic observation from an Irish fellow-passenger. As the voyage was long and tiresome, he used to walk the deck with an appearance of restlessness, while the Irishman would stretch himself on a bench, and lie all day with his eyes fixed on the masts as if it were a book.

"'Pon my conscience, Mr. B——," he exclaimed one day, "I wonder you don't wear out your legs!"

"Why," was the reply, "when a man has but a space of twenty feet by four to turn in, he can scarcely take too much exercise."

"But where's the need of exercise?"

"The need?"

"Yes. Doesn't the captain say the ship is carrying us two hundred miles a day? Surely that's exercise enough."

A FORTUNE LOST AND WON.

The fact has already been published in the Virginian that Mr. T. M. Benson, the popular chief clerk of the Old Dominion Steamship Company at Newport News, was the fortunate winner of one-tenth of the capital prize of $150,000 in the recent grand drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery. The press despatches had it that W. H. Landon of Newport News, had been the winner, and thereby hangs the tale of how a very respectable fortune was lost and won. The particulars are as follows: A party of five had individually purchased tenth tickets, in the last grand lottery. Among the five was a youth named W. H. Landon, and the tenth of a ticket he purchased was 71,411. After receiving his ticket and holding it for some time he thought there was more money in selling his ticket than in holding it, and he sold it to Mr. T. M. Benson.

Mr. Benson is a regular subscriber to the Norfolk Virginian, and always looks upon it as a welcome visitor, but never more so than when he read in it the announcement of the lucky numbers in the last drawing and saw that the ticket he held, No. 71,411, was the one that drew the first capital prize. He is a married man, with a loving wife and two beautiful children, and he took quick steps to his pleasant home, and read the happy announcement contained in the Virginian to his dear ones. Mr. Benson is a very practical man. He placed his ticket in the charge of the Home Savings Bank of Norfolk for collection, and quietly pursues the even tenor of his business. He has been investing one dollar a month in The Louisiana State Lottery for some years, and considers that it was a profitable investment. He has been the recipient of many letters and telegrams of congratulation from friends throughout the country.—Norfolk (Va.) Virginian, Dec. 3.

WIT AND WISDOM.

—Disorder in a drawing room is vulgar; in an antiquary's study, not; the black battle-stain on a soldier's face is not vulgar, but the dirty face of a housemaid is.—Ruskin.

—Only a Step.—

Nature made the model man

The man was then a dude.

—The sophomores at Bowdoin College attempted to capture a ten-gallon keg of cider from the freshmen a few days ago, but failed. During the night Cilley of the class of '91 climbed to the top of the northern spire of King's Chapel, and succeeded in fastening there a white flag bearing his class numerals. The spire is of stone and 120 feet high, and the only means of assent was a lightning rod.

WHERE ARE YOU GOING?

If you have a pain in the back, pale and sallow complexion, bilious or sick headache, eruptions on the skin, coated tongue, sluggish circulation, or a hacking cough, you are going into your grave if you do not take steps to cure yourself. If you are wise you will do this by the use of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," compounded of the most efficacious ingredients known to medical science for giving health and strength to the system through the medium of the liver and the blood.

"Waiter, take away this beer; it's muddy." The waiter (without stirring)—"You are deceived, sir. It is the glass which is dirty; the beer is excellent. Taste it."

A VALUABLE MEDICAL TREATISE.

The edition of 1888 of the sterling Medical Annual, known as Hostetter's Almanac, is now ready, and may be obtained, free of cost, of druggists and general country dealers in all parts of the United States, Mexico, and indeed in every civilized portion of the Western Hemisphere. The Almanac has been issued regularly at the commencement of every year for over one-fifth of a century. It combines, with the soundest practical advice for the preservation and restoration of health, a large amount of interesting and amusing light reading, and the calendar, astronomical calculations, chronological items, etc., are prepared with great care, and will be found entirely accurate. The issue of Hostetter's Almanac for 1888 will probably be the largest edition of a medical work ever published in any country. The proprietors, Messrs. Hostetter & Co., Pittsburg, Pa., on receipt of a two-cent stamp, will forward a copy by mail to any person who cannot procure one in his neighborhood.

Life seems hardly worth the living to-day to many a tired, unhappy discouraged woman who is suffering from chronic female weakness for which she has been able to find no relief. But there is a certain cure for all the painful complaints to which the weaker sex is liable. We refer to Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" to the virtues of which thousands of women can testify. As a tonic and nervine it is unsurpassed. All druggists.

Wonderful to say, the pain and inflammation began to abate in three hours. In two days I was entirely cured. I always take great pleasure in recommending ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS; they are certainly the best external remedy known. I used them as chest protectors, and found them most efficient."

HOW THEY FALL BEHIND.

There is really no profit in recommending the worthless, for the reaction in the minds of those who buy and are deceived is pointedly against everything sold by such a dealer. Hence, the force of the following voluntary letter, which is based upon the conscientious conviction formed from the long and cautious experience of a leading drug house of Boston, represents in every line a most important and valued revelation: "Boston, July 11, 1887.—The Charles A. Vogeler Co.—Gentlemen: Many preparations are placed before the public, and for a time at least they have a large but temporary sale—large, because of the extensive advertising; temporary, as the suffering class soon realize that the compound possesses but little merit. Not so with St. Jacobs Oil. Its success has been constant from the start, and to-day we regard it as one of those standard remedies that our trade consider as absolutely essential to always carry in their stock. Personal experience and the good words of the druggists of New England all tend to prove that each year will add to its sale and well deserved popularity. Signed, Doolittle & Smith." Taking the many cases of cure, published by the proprietors, examples are given of its unvarying effects in the worst chronic cases, and there is nothing in trade which can approach its efficacy.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. PIERCE thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have sallow color of skin, or yellowish-brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills, alternating with hot flashes, low spirits and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and coated tongue, you are suffering from Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and Torpid Liver, or "Biliousness." In many cases only part of these symptoms are experienced. As a remedy for all such cases, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is unsurpassed.

CARL DUNDER'S PLAINT.

Detroit's Teutonic Philosopher Sighs For the Old German Customs.

"Sergeant," said Carl Dunder as he tip-toed into the station-house yesterday, "I pelief I like to go pack to Shermany again."

"What's the matter now?"

"Vhell, every thing vhas too fast und too strange oafer here for some old man's like me. Dot Yankee vhas a queer feller—awful queer. Some man's come into my place eafery day und yell out:

"'Hi! dere! Two peers! Set 'em oop, queek! Ta! ta! Good-pye, Dunder!'

"Und he throws down der money, gulps down dot peer, und vhas off before I can say Shack Robinson. It doan' be like dot in Shermany. I goes mit a place at a shlow walk, und I goes in py der door und shpeaks with eafery pody. I ask him aboudt his wife und shildren, his horse und cow und pig, his health und his garden, und by und by I sat down und say to dot barkeeper:

"'Hans, may pe you haf some peer?'

"'Yes, Herr Dunder.'

"'May pe it vhas goot peer?'

"'Yes, he vhas.'

"'Vheil I try a glass.'

"He goes py der cellar und prings him oop, und I take a seat und play some sheckers, und i drink a leedle und wait, und drink some more und wait, und by und by it vhas twelve o'clock und I goes home to dinner."

"That's too slow, Mr. Dunder."

"Dot's der vhay ail you Yankees say. How long you pelief I vhas getting married, Sergeant?"

"Oh, perhaps three weeks, and that's giving you seven days over the rest of us."

"Tree weeks! Vhy, it vhas ten y'ars, und dot vhas too soon! If I wait one more y'ar I doan' marry Mrs. Dunder at all! It vhas like dis: It takes von y'ar to be introduced to dot girl. It takes von y'ar more before you like to call her py her first name. May pe, after fife y'ar I take her hand und say dot I like to be married, but it vhas fife y'ar more pefore she consents und vhas ali ready."

"Too slow for me."

"Und you vhas in sooch a hurry dot you doan' lif oudt half your days. Dot prings me down to peesness. Shake has run avhay some more."

"No!"

"He goes last night. We haf some fuss again. Shake vhas too much like a Yankee, und I talk und talk to him und it vhas no goot. Do you know Shake feels so pig dot he doan' like to haf my clothes cut oafer for him any more!"

"Is that possible?"

"Dot vhas possible. In der oldt country wooden shoes vhas all right for me. In dis country Shake likes some fine gaiters, und he shines em oop mit placking. Some oldt hat vhas goot enough for me, but Shake he must go oudt und puy von for tree dollar. I haf some pants mit only two holes in 'em, but Shake won't put 'em on. Vhen I vhas a poy I doan' haf ten cents a month. Shake comes to me almost eafery day und says he likes half a dollar or seex shillings. In der oldt country I play sheckers or pitch horseshoes. My Shake learns how to play poker und pilliards und lots of odder games, und it makes your hair shtand oop to hear him talk of base-pall and cricket. He calls me old moss-pack, und sooch, und yesterday I make up my mind to put a shtop to him."

"Took him down cellar, eh?"

"Dot's vhas I like to do. I get dot strap und tell him to come along, but he says I vhas too fresh, und he vhas gone pefore I get him, sergeant."

"Well?"

"May pe I vhas wrong. May pe it vhas deeferent in dis country. May pe dot poy of to-day vhas not like der oldt poys. I doan' shleep any all night und der oldt womans she vhas crying all der time for Shake, and so, if you see him, you may tell him to come pack. Tell him dot we try again. If he doan' say I vhas too fresh, und if he doan' tell me to put oop my dukes, und if he doan' keep talking aboudt carom shots, hot grounders, Shackpots und so on I try to make it all right und get along. Shust tell him dot, sergeant, und you may shently hint to him dot if he doan' do petter you pelief he vhill pe hung for murder. Good-pye, sergeant—may pe I vhas too oldt for dis country."—Detroit Free Press.

A Bit of Vandalism.

I sat alongside of a lady in a street car the other day on my way down town. She was elegant as to attire and intelligent as to visage. She was reading, or rather looking over, one of the leading magazines, and ever and anon, when it became necessary to move forward a page, she used her index finger—her hand was incased in a glove—for a paper-cutter. Shades of Tom Dibdin! what a mess she made of it. Ripped, torn, ragged and jagged, by the time we were half way down town that poor magazine was a sight to behold. True, you're right, it was her magiazine, but my feelings happened to belong to me. —Book Maker.

"Oh! well, then you may keep it for your honesty!" said the caustic wit.—N. Y. Ledger.

PERSEUS AND ANDROMEDA.

A Pretty Story Full of Interest to Every Student of Astronomy.

Although the story of Perseus and Andromeda is, of course, well-known to nearly all readers, yet, on account of the great beauty and brilliancy of the group of constellations that perpetuate the memory of it among the stars, it is worth recalling here. It will be remember that, as Perseus was returning through the air from his conquest of the Gorgon Medusa, he saw the beautiful Andromeda chained to a rock on the sea coast, waiting to be devoured by a sea monster. The poor girl's only offense was that her mother, Cassiopeia, had boasted for her that she was fairer than the sea beauty, Atergatis, and for this Neptune had decreed that all the land of the Ethiopians should be drowned and destroyed unless Andromeda was delivered up as a sacrifice to the dreadful sea monster. When Perseus, dropping down to learn why this maiden was chained to the rock, heard from Andromeda's lips the story of her woes he laughed with joy. Here was an adventure just to his liking, and, besides, unlike his previous adventures, it involved the fate of a pretty woman with whom he was already in love. Could he save her? Well, wouldn't he! The sea monster might frighten a kingdom full of Ethiops, but it could not shake the nerves of a hero from Greece. He whispered words of encouragement to Andromeda, who could scarce believe the good news that a champion had come to defend her after all her friends and royal relations had deserted her. Neither could she feel much confidence in her young champion's powers, when suddenly her horrified gaze met the awful monster of the deep advancing to his feast! But Perseus, with a warning to Andromeda not to look at what he was to do, sprang with his winged sandals up into the air. And then, as Charles Kingsley has so beautifully told the story:

"On came the great sea monster, coasting along like a huge black galley, lazily breasting the ripple, and stopping at times by creek or headland to watch for the laughter of girls at their bleaching, or cattle pawing on the sand-hills, or boys bathing on the beach. His great sides were fringed with clustering shells and sea-weeds, and the water gurgled in and out of his wide jaws as he rolled along, dripping and glistening in the beams of the morning sun. At last he saw Andromeda and shot forward to take his prey, while the waves foamed white behind him, and before him the fish fled, leaping.

"Then down from the height of the air fell Perseus like a shooting-star—down to the crest of the waves, while Andromeda hid her face as he shouted. And then there was silence for awhile.

"At last she looked up trembling, and saw Perseus springing toward her; and instead of the monster, a long, black rock, with the sea rippling quietly around it."—Popular Science Monthly.

RABBIT KEEPING.

An Industry Which has Proved Quite Profitable in Many Places.

Rabbits, either brown, white or black, should all be kept in the same manner. It is quite difficult to breed them justly and correctly. Those too near related should never be bred together, as the offspring will surely be weak and feeble, and not attain a full growth. They should be mated well, both in color, eyes and form. For a pen, a box three by four feet, and about three feet high, is plenty large enough. The box should be closed on all sides except the front, which can be covered with some suitable material, such as wire netting in the form of a door; this will keep the animals enclosed and allow you to look at them. Cover the floor with a sheet of tin in the shape of a bread pan, so the pen can be easily cleaned each morning by taking out the false bottom. I have my pens arranged so the rabbits can have their freedom to a certain extent, that is, they have a yard just like the fowls. The breeding house should be arranged so it will have a department out of sight of the observer in which the female rabbit can make her nest. The period of gestation is about twenty-one days, and when the young are three weeks old they can be removed from the mother. The male rabbit must not be allowed near the young litter, as he is apt to eat them up. Rabbits resemble Guinea pigs in having their young every six weeks; sometimes two in a litter, at others seven or eight. For feed give carrots, turnips, cabbages and in fact most all green or vegetable substances. But little liquid is needed, except in warm weather, or while breeding, when milk should be given. They should be fed very often. It is considered very poor practice to meddle with the "bunnies" until they are a week or so old. At three weeks old the young should be separated from the old, and the females from the males. Rabbits grow very rapidly, and their liberty should be given them to a certain extent, so they may attain a large and healthy size. As our climate is cold in late fall and winter the rabbits should be taken to some warm place or their quarters made extremely comfortable, otherwise they will be seriously if not fatally affected. Damp and dark places are as sure death to them as to any useful animal.—Prairie Farmer.

—Mother—"Help! Help! Our little Josie has swallowed a cent!" Father—"What a fuss! You make as much noise as if she had swallowed a twenty-dollar gold piece."—The Epoch.

POPOCATEPETL'S CRATER.

A Scene of Desolation Sublime in Its Unapproachable Grandeur.

Of all the wandering millions since this weary world was young, few feet have ever reached this spot, and of these few not many have been women's. Think of it—over three and a half miles in mid air, half a mile above the tip-top pinnacle of Mont Blanc! The highest mountain in Europe lacks over two thousand feet of being as lofty as Popocatapetl. Of course, the chief object of interest on top of the volcano is the crater. Imagine the interior of a mountain literally blown out by an explosion, to the depth of one thousand eight hundred feet, leaving a narrow rim on its inside surface, over which the sea of snow curls higher than a man's head. I looked over the dizzy brink in mute astonishment. A vast cavity, unsuspected from the outside, at least a mile across, sank away at my feet, rock-ribbed, ragged and torn along its precipitous sides. Out of the orifice in its deep and dismal bottom rose jets of steam, puffing and blowing in the dead air. A workman who had wrought in the crater told me that the fumeros, or steam vents, instead of being a foot in diameter, as they appeared, measured from twelve to eighteen feet. The vapor pouring out of these holes is highly impregnated with sulphur, which is deposited on the rocks and in the soil, furnishing an inexhaustible supply of this valuable mineral. The crane and rigging for lowering the workmen into this inferno consists of a strong beam projecting a few feet over the abyss; over a pulley in the end runs a long rope, with a loop in the lower end. The person wishing to descend stands in the loop, holds the rope in one hand and with the other manages a stick to protect himself from injury by swinging against the rocks. Two peons let the rope run slowly over the pulley, and the descent occupies about fifteen minutes.

The bottom of the crater is covered with scoriæ, which glitters with various colors. In one place is a stone, so large that a man can stand upon it, which rises and falls as it feels the effect of the subterranean vapors. At the lowest point is a lake, the water of which has an acid taste. The edge of the crater is composed of immense bowlders of porphery and basalt, and one may descend some distance on foot by an icy pathway leading downward to the huge rock which supports the malucate, or machine for lowering the workmen. Since the mountain has been giving out its sulphurous breath for unnumbered centuries, the amount already existing is beyond estimation, and something like a ton is daily deposited. It would hardly be an exaggeration to say that the upper part of the mountain is an immense block of sulphur, inclosed in a shell of rock a few yards thick. Three qualities of sulphur are obtained by the operations here. The best is almost chemically pure, and is obtained at the resperaldos, or steam-vents, whence it issues in a liquid state and hardens as it cools. The other two qualities are known to the trade as "rich" and "pure" sulphur ore. The former yields from eighty-two to eighty-seven per cent. of pure sulphur; the latter about fifty per cent. The process used in its purification is that of Michel. Distillation takes place at Tlamacas in half-cylinders which serve as retorts. One who has stood upon the brink of that crater can never forget the awful silence that broods over the scene of desolation.—Fannie B. Ward, in Troy (N. Y.) Times.

A MODEST OLD MAN.

He Gives a Strictly Truthful Account of His Wonderful Record.

Briar got into conversation with an old man who was sitting in front of a livery barn in Leadville, Col., who incidentally mentioned that he was born in Missouri and had lived all his life in the Territories or extreme Western States.

"Ah, then I suppose you rode the first pony express that went through to the coast?" Briar suggested, mildly but confidently.

"No, I never rode the pony express at all," he replied.

"Didn't? Then you're the original discoverer of gold in California?"

"No, you're mistaken again," returned the old man, sadly.

"I am?" said Briar, now thoroughly astonished. "But of course you guided the first Union Pacific surveyors?"

"No," and the old man sighed. "No, I didn't do that, either."

"Well, this beats me!" said Briar, still more surprised. "Perhaps you aren't the original owner of the land where Denver now stands?"

"N-o-o; never owned it."

"See here, now, weren't you chief of scouts for the Government for fifteen years?"

"O, no, no—no, honest, I never was."

"Now, be careful—tell the truth—weren't you playing cards with Wild Bill when he was shot at Deadwood?"

"No! Let up, please—I wasn't in any of those places nor didn't do none of them things, an' I can prove it; but, then, young man, I don't mind tellin' you that I did guide Brigham Young on his first trip to Salt Lake, an' I was all through the Kansas-Newbrasky trouble, an' finally put it down, made the first find in Nevada, learnt Buffalo Bill how to load a gun, drove the first Black Hills treasure-coach, an' was the only man that come through the Custer massacre alive, after layin' on the battlefield wounded for forty-eight hours, surrounded by the groans an' shrieks of the dead an' dyin'! That's my record, young feller, an' I got the papers for ev'ry word of it!"—Chicago Tribune.

ECONOMY IN DRESS.

A Problem Easy to Discuss, But Very Difficult to Solve.

The problem of dressing economically is one that most women have to solve. Although good dress is not necessarily expensive, yet it takes money to be wisely economical. Some one says that a lady should choose first the becoming, then the good, and last the fashionable in dress, considering her age, station and "points." It is well, from the point of economy, to decide upon a certain style of dress and adhere to it. When a limited range of becoming colors has been fixed upon, it is much easier to combine the two old dresses into one and to use up odds and ends successfully.

A few people affect a permanent style copied from some old picture; several good dresses may then last for years without need of change. But the greater number of women who "study economy dress in black, which is cheap, becoming, liked by most gentlemen, and sanctioned by these artists in inexpensive living—the French." Every one has heard of the English lady who always dressed in rich black velvet and antique lace and yet spent less than her neighbors. She accomplished this miracle by having three velvet dresses of different degrees of newness, and buying one every five years. A certain New York lady always wore black silk, declaring it was cheaper and more satisfactory than any other dress. Old ladies should certainly adopt a permanent, subdued style of dress. Unhealthy dress is always extravagant. Heavy skirts, tight waists and Louis Quinze boots bring expensive doctors' bills. It is an economy to have a few dresses that will meet all emergencies; there are less to be kept in order and made over. A real lady would be satisfied with a few things, good of their kind. Handsome lace, a fine jewel of cameo, an India shawl will last a life-time and be an economy in the end.

Wash dresses are by no means economical unless a laundry is kept in the house. Black wraps, and bonnets to go with all one's dresses, save trouble and expense. One ought not to save on shoes, gloves and corsets, as they should always be well cut and in good condition. The beauty of a gown depends not upon its price, but on its cut and color; cashmere is one of the prettiest as well as one of the cheapest materials, and comes in the most beautiful colors. Whether or not a general style of dress has been decided upon, the economist will always buy with judgment. She will consider what she has and what she needs, often planning one dress to answer for several occasions. She will avoid novelties as too noticeable for her limited and long-enduring wardrobe, and follow only the general direction of fashion's dictates. She will understand all the secrets of "bargains," "remnants," and buying at the end of a season when goods are "reduced," but she will never buy any thing merely because it is "cheap" or because the salesman assures her it is just what she wants. She always gets good materials, knowing they cost less in the end, and gives preference to those noted for their durability, as Scotch cheviots and India silks. She will prefer French underwear with its delicate hand-wrought sewing and embroidery to garments loaded with Hamburg edging and cheap lace, and she will know that antique laces last twice as long and are twice as handsome as the modern article. Before buying a color to place near her face, our prudent woman will test its effect upon her hand and draw her conclusions; if a vivid green makes her hand pale and sallow, it will have a similar effect upon her face.

Of course, the woman who can make her own clothes saves a great deal; materials are cheap, but making is not. Many ladies make their own summer dresses, but employ a dressmaker for handsome costumes; in this case it is economy to select a thoroughly good workwoman, even if somewhat expensive, but to see that she does not choose wasteful fashions or recklessly squander her material. A well cut and made garment wears longer and is always a satisfaction. The tailor suits of the present day are wonderfully suitable and economical for street wear. An old suit for a bad day saves the better one, and an old black silk is a treasure. It is hard to tell just when a dress should be "made over"—experience only can decide. A thrifty young woman of my acquaintance never has a dress which can not be washed; her wool dresses come from the wash-tub "as good as new." Velvet waists and pretty neck arrangements and handkerchiefs freshen up old skirts. The old things should be used in preference to buying new ones. Aprons save dresses; a jersey substituted for the dress waist under a wrap is economy, and so is the combination of an old skirt and fresh waist under a long garment for theater wear.

In fact economy has a thousand little tricks to save. Have several pairs of shoes on hand and the same of gloves, giving preference to the usual tan color. If you can make your own bonnets, always buy the best velvet and wear it several seasons with a little change. Expensive ruching which can not be washed is more extravagant than fine lace. Do not wear white skirts on the street. One need not fear being "known" by a dress, provided it is good. By all means keep your wardrobe in first rate repair, leaving no hole or rip unmended —A. M. Turner, in Good Housekeeping.

SONGS OF THE DAY.

How the Public is Enabled to Get Them For Almost Nothing.

At two or three street corners in New York little sheets of paper flutter in the air with printing on them that looks like poetry. They are songs, at a cent apiece. Some are classical, many were dear to the ears of past generations, others are "revival" airs, negro ditties are numerous, a great number are love-songs and there is a class with titles full of filial devotion which may be styled "mother" songs.

One or two small rooms in Park row furnish them to the whole country. In 1879 they were printed with a hand-press, but the next year a steam printing press was used. As fast as a song runs out a new edition of twelve hundred copies is printed from a stereotype plate.

Most of the songs are copyrighted, but the publishers are willing that the Park row place should issue all the cent reprints it can. In the first place, printing the words in this cheap way increases the demand for the song with the music. Then the publisher of the cent sheets sells the words with the music at the unvarying price of forty cents. He buys them of the other publishers at prices ranging from thirty cents to sixty. All the cent reprints are copyrighted.

Two pale-faced girls came into the room in Park row. They were about fifteen years of age. "Have you got 'Our Good Ship Sails To-Night?'" asked one of them. She bought two copies of it, and two of "Her Own Boy, Jack."

"I'd like 'I'm Waitin' My Love's Return,'" said the other. They paid their five cents and went out happy.

"What is the most popular song you have?"

"'The Old Folks at Home,'" was the prompt reply. "It came out thirty years ago, and has sold steadily ever since. We are printing new editions of it all the time."

"What are some other favorite songs?"

"Love songs always sell well. 'Good-Bye, My Love, Good-Bye,' is one of the most popular. 'The Dying Girl's Message' goes well, too. All the 'mother' songs catch on every time. There are no less than fifty 'mother' songs in the publisher's stock."

Some of this year's crop of cent songs are: "White Wings," "The Letter That Never Came," "Cricket On the Hearth," and "Since My Mother's Dead and Gone."

Popular songs are set to a tune that is not only catching but easily caught. People hear them at the theater, find themselves humming them afterward, wish they had the words to that song, see it somewhere for a cent, and buy it. After a few demands for some particular song the publisher sees that it has taken and prints it.

Business houses buy thousands of the popular cent songs, print an advertisement on the blank side, and distribute them gratuitously. It pays. People keep the song, advertisement and all.

Larger sheets are printed with six or eight songs for two cents. But these do not take as well. The sheet is too large. After flagging a little during the era of cheap music with words, the songs are now looking up again.—N. Y. World.

BRIDAL JEWELRY.

Useful Information for Liberally-Inclined Grooms and Brides.

A solitaire diamond ring in slender delicate setting is no longer the only choice for engagement rings, as those with colored stones are now favored, especially when associated with diamonds, as a sapphire or a ruby beside a diamond, and two smaller brilliants on either side. When the lady gives her lover a betrothal ring it has a single stone set "flush"—sunken in the gold in Gypsy fashion. The wedding-ring of purest gold is plain and inconspicuous. Lovers no longer believe pearls are tears for a bride, as grooms' wedding gifts are now quite as often pearls as diamonds, consisting of a pearl necklace of one festooned strand, or from two to six or eight strands, which may lie flat or be coiled like a rope; pearl ear-rings complete the parure, and may be either screws or drops with a small diamond at the top. If the groom prefers to give diamond ear-rings, they should be solitaires of not more than three or four carats the pair if they are drops; and if they are screws, weighing not over two carats the pair; large diamonds are for elderly women—for dowagers, not for brides. Bracelets given to the bride by the groom are slender and flexible, set with diamonds alone, or else pearls with diamonds. Instead of the crescent or star of diamonds, a diamond sun is a new brooch given brides for fastening lace of the corsage or the bridal veil. A true-lover knot made of loops of small diamonds is for the same purpose. At this season of gifts the bride, not wishing to monopolize all, gives the groom something practical such as sleeve-buttons, or a scarf-pin, or a set of studs, which for the sake of sentiment may all be of pearls; she also gives her bridemaids each a brooch or a bonnet-pin of an enameled flower, or of some small stones, or else a slender bracelet. A souvenir ring or a fan is given each maiden. Scarf-pins are the usual gift from the groom to his ushers, and always gloves and boutonnieres for the ceremony.—Harper's Bazar.

DISTILLATION OF WOOD.

How Some Portions of New York's Forests Are Now Being Utilized.

A stock company of Cadosia, N. Y., has several establishments in that vicinity for the distillation of wood, which has now become an extensive and important industry.

Almost any of the harder varieties of wood will answer, but those chiefly found and used by this company, in the region it now occupies, are birch, beech and maple. Pine, hemlock and soft woods will not answer. The general operations and products of the company are as follows:

Contracts are made with the neighboring farmers for the purchase of standing wood, on which an agreed amount is paid in advance, balance payable as fast as the wood is cut by the company. The wood is delivered at the works in ordinary four-foot lengths and is then piled in the distilling retorts, of which there are in the Cadosia still-house twenty-four pairs. These retorts consist of cast iron, somewhat in the form of a steam boiler, about ten feet long and four and one-half feet in diameter, having a large manhole in one end and condensing exit neck at the other end. When a retort is filled with wood, the manhole is closed and sealed; a slow fire is then started under the retort. The first products of the distillation, consisting of alcoholic vapors, are pressed through a condensing worm, and the liquid thus produced is subsequently redistilled, and the product then sold. Most of it goes to Binghamton, N. Y., where it is refined and put on the market as wood alcohol.

The second products of the distillation, consisting of acetic vapors, are condensed as before described, and the liquid is mixed with lime, thorough mixture being effected by mechanical means, thus producing acetate of lime—used in cloth-printing works. The crude acetate is placed above the retorts on racks, where it is dried, and is then ready for market.

The third products of the distillation, consisting of tarry matters and naphthas, are shipped as produced, and subsequently refined.

The last products, consisting of heavy tars, are used at the works as fuel. When the distillation is finished, there remains within the retorts a mass of clean and beautiful charcoal, ready for market, and all of it is sold to the steel makers. Most of it goes to Troy, N. Y., where it is chiefly used in the production of fine steel.

The principal fuel used in these works is bituminous coal, which, together with the crude lime required, is brought to the works by railway.

We are indebted to a correspondent who resides in the vicinity for these particulars, which are only intended to convey a very general idea of the modes in which some portions of the forests in Delaware County, N. Y., are now being utilized.

The tanning of leather has been and still is a leading industry in this region. This involves the use of large quantities of bark, the trunks of the trees being sawed up and converted into lumber.—Scientific American.

THE POLICE GUN.

Description of a Weapon Which Shoots 1,000 Shots a Minute.

Dr. R. J. Gatling, the inventor of the famous gun which bears his name, has invented another instrument of destruction which he calls the "Police Gun." It was on exhibition recently. An interested group of army officers and newspaper men studied its mechanism and listened to the inventor's explanation of its virtues. It is a brass gun, weighing seventy-eight pounds, and is mounted on a tripod, the whole arrangement weighing only 149 pounds. It is capable of firing one thousand shots a minute. The general working principle of the gun is the same as that of the gun which bears Dr. Gatling's name and is so widely known. The improvement is in the method of loading. In the police gun a magazine holding sixty-two cartridges and looking like the hopper on a corn-sheller set up on one end, at right angles on the top of the brass barrel. The turning of the handle by the cannoneer drops the cartridges into six revolving barrels within the cannon. As the barrel revolves a lock with a spiral spring catches each cartridge and a small needle in the lock strikes the percussion cap, exploding it. The next instant an extra claw clutches the empty shell and following a spiral groove it is dislodged from the gun. When one magazine is empty another stands ready to take its place. As the empty shells fall in a stream from the orifice it looks for all the world like a country corn-sheller, with the denuded cobs dropping to the floor as the farm hand turns the crank. By a long lever the cannoneer can with his left hand change the range on the gun, shoot up or down or sideways, while his right hand he turns the crank that puts the stream of cartridges in motion. "We can clean the streets of a mob and housetops as well," said Dr. Gatling, a peaceful looking old gentleman with spectacles and a snowy beard. "The gun will kill a man a mile off, though one thousand yards is the best range. We don't want to see our cities overrun by a mob as was Pittsburgh. Why, no man would stand in range of that gun. If he did he would be foolish, to say the least."—N. Y. Letter.

ALASKA'S RESOURCES.

An Old Black Hills Miner's Experience in the Far Away Territory.

In the course of my travels I found my way to Alaska, and thinking some of your readers might be interested in this wonderful, far-away country, I detail a few of my own personal experiences since coming here last spring.

On April 24 we landed here and on May 5, in company with a small party, I left Juneau for the interior of Alaska, at the headwaters of Lynn Channel, a place called Chilcoot. We left the salt water and crossed the Alaskan range of mountains, and before we were aware of it were traveling on ice on the headwaters of the great Yukon river. We made about two hundred miles on ice and then stopped to build small boats, which we launched and went down the river for six hundred miles, when we rounded to and sailed into the mouth of Forty Mile creek, the latest and best find of placer mines of Alaska. The Yukon river throws the Mississippi in the shade for its size and its swift waters. Below Stewart river it assumes a magnitude not to be compared to any other river in North America. Along its frozen shores and innumerable islands for hundred of miles not a sign of habitation could be seen. Fearful ice gorges seem to have torn both shores and islands in a fearful manner, reaching for sixty miles high on land among the alder, birch and cottonwood. This is done during the month of May of each year. Here and there appears a solitary grave of an Indian buried like civilized people, surrounded by a paling fence. The whole interior of Alaska is very sparsely inhabited by what are known as "Stick" Indians and Tananas, and for hospitality these poor, diminutive creatures have no parallel among the civilized or uncivilized nations of the earth. They are glad to see you, even to tears, and as you leave their huts on shore and embark again on the waters, after a few moments of hand-skaking their plaintive good-byes re-echo on the waters till distance silences their voices. The general look of the country through which the Yukon passes resembles the Black Hills of Dakota and Montana. Some times there are low hills and again high mountains, with little or no timber; pine and cottonwood are all that can be seen, and these are stunted, warped and twisted, fit for little but firewood, and showing the fearful intensity of the cold winter. In winter the thermometer indicates from seventy to ninety degrees below zero. The Canadian Government has had two surveying parties out this season making topographical observations. I met Mr. Ogilvie and his party below Pellay river. He said that Forty-mile river would be the British Northwest Territory. Of course he would say that, but I think it must be in Alaska, and a long way, too.

Now, as to the gold there. There is a great deal of it, but even there it is very much mixed up with much dirt and gravel. I could do no sluicing, because the ground worked on Forty-mile river this year is right down close to the water's ends. All the high bars are covered with moss which covers the whole of the interior to the depth of from one to two feet, and under this are the frosts of ages, which hold in their vastness dirt, gravel, gold, bedrock and all, making it almost out of the question to mine. I have, therefore, drawn this conclusion from my experience here that, while I have no doubt as to rich bars and extensive placer mines being there, yet it is foolishness for men to go there for less than two or three years, otherwise they can accomplish nothing. Six of us worked twenty-four days and took out $1,800, then turned and came back. I would have stayed there if there had been a good opportunity to mine in good shape. He who goes to the Yukon of Alaska must be an expert navigator, whip-sawyer, miner, explorer, sailor and a general expert, free from all earthly cares and incumbrances. Besides all this he must be good-natured and cheerful under all circumstances.—John W. Allen, in Chicago Inter Ocean.

Paper Axle Boxes.

Experiments are being made on Prussian railways with axle boxes fitted with bearings of vegetable parchment in place of brass. The parchment is strongly compressed before being used, and it is thoroughly dried to prevent subsequent shrinkage. Wooden rings are placed on the outside of the bearings, fitting the collars of the journal. An emulsion of water and oil and all the mineral oils are used as lubricants. The parchment soon becomes impregnated with oil, and is able to go a long time without a renewal of lubrication. It is between the body of the journal and the thin edge of the parchment segments that friction takes place. The claim is made that these compressed paper bearings make a tough material that is superior to metal. Such bearings are also in use in a German saw-mill, with satisfactory operation.—Boston Budget.

—Mr. Dash—"Now, sir, let's have an understanding. You owe me two hundred dollars." Mr. Smash—"I know I do." "Let me ask you a plain question, then. Do you intend to pay me?" "No, sir, I do not." "Confound it, why didn't you say so before? Here I've called twenty times for that bill, and this is the first time I've received a straightforward answer. Good morning, sir!"

FANCIES IN FURNITURE.

Mahogany is the popular wood for this season.

A carved footstool has its sides in embossed brass.

Fourteenth century chairs are returning to favor.

Cabinets and toilet tables of papier mache are once more in use.

Parlor suits of six pieces, no two alike, are in fashion and in favor.

Furniture carvers should be careful not to make their cutting too deep.

Desks for offices and rooms are made to contain a concealed washstand.

A hat rack is provided with protruding erect ovals of nickel plated wire for silk hats.

Dwarf book cases, elaborately carved and gilded, are to be seen in the most fashionable houses.

Table beds are new. They are converted from one to the other readily, and may be used as either.

Brass cabinets are quite pretty and quite stylish; pillars have florinted capitals, panels of antique design, etc.

A dressing table has a double top, the upper divided in the middle and opening to right and left on hinges.

Furniture may be painted the most effectively by rubbing down each coat, as is done in carriage painting.

Fauteuils of the toniest quality are made from locust wood and upholstered in pink and blue, with golden fringe.

Jewel caskets of tortoise shell, with four drawers, are neat and expensive. They make excellent Christmas presents.

Drawing room tables of unique appearance are made from coarse Irish stalks of light greenish yellow and bound by withes of red.

A new color to stain wood is a rich violet, and the stain is thus made: The wood is heated with a bath of four and one-half ounces of olive oil, same of soda ash and two and one-half pints of boiling water. It is then dyed with magenta.

Folding beds are selling well about the holiday season. There is considerable mechanical ingenuity displayed in their construction. One house, well known as the residence of a wealthy gentleman, has a folding bed in every apartment, thus making each room a parlor.—New York Mail and Express.

TAKE — SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

For all Diseases of the

Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Spleen.

This purely vegetable preparation, now so celebrated as a Family Medicine, originated in the South in 1828. It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. ## MARRIED.

DECKER—ADAMS—At Lone Pine, January 28, 1888, by Rev. T. E. Sisson, Mr. Stephen Decker and Miss Ida Adams, both of Lone Pine.

The new grass has made a good start the past ten days.

E. O. Miller has been appointed Register of the Land Office at Visalia.

Eight cases of small pox are reported in the hospital at Los Angeles.

White Smith came up from Keeler and was in town a few days this week.

The artesian well project appears to be sleeping the sleep that knows no waking.

Henry Rhine got back last evening from San Francisco; he had been in the City over two months.

Manuel Diaz was up from Lone Pine on Wednesday. He said everything is very quiet down the valley.

John S. Gorman went down to Keeler last Wednesday. He is again busy with his mining interests.

Lookout is getting to be a rather lively camp; twenty-eight miners are at work there now, all getting out ore.

Mr. William McCown, formerly a resident of Owens valley, has lately opened a hotel at Tipton, Tulare county.

Rev. T. E. Sisson will preach at the M. E Church tomorrow, Sunday, evening at 7 o'clock. Sunday School at 2 o'clock afternoon.

The Maxim mill will be started up in a few days on ore from the Poleta mine. W. Hedge went up to the mill yesterday to put things in order.

Mr. J. C. Crocker, of Big Pine, went over to Kern county some weeks ago; he is bringing back with him a very fine Clydesdale stallion.

There is a steady demand for lots in the Academy addition at Bishop Creek. Last week Mr. Joseph Shelly invested in a tract and paid $125.

On the Stevens ditch very little delay has been caused through any fault in the weather. The work goes steadily forward and is rapidly nearing a finish.

Mr. G. Sanger and Mr. A. P. Smith got back from a trip to Kern county last Monday. They brought back a lot of nice young mares with them.

Last Friday an artesian well that was being bored at South Riverside, Los Angeles county, struck a flow of water that measures twenty seven miners inches.

The buds on peach, apricot and nectarine trees having been swelling rapidly the past week; the trees will soon be in bloom if the present weather continues.

California State Fair will be held at Sacramento September 3d to 15th inclusive. Los Angeles Fair will be held at Los Angeles August 6th to 11th inclusive.

A very large party met at the wedding of Miss Ida Adams and Mr. Stephen Decker. The ceremony was performed at the home of Miss Adams at Lone Pine, last Sunday evening.

Feed for cattle is reported to be very scarce over in Kern and other neighboring counties. The ground is said to be quite bare of all kinds of grass, and large numbers of sheep and cattle are dying of starvation.

Last week one of the worst storms ever known swept over the Atlantic States. Trains were snowed under and had to be abandoned by the train men; whole car loads of cattle were frozen to death; travel and business were stopped.

Last week Mrs. J. W. Kline committed suicide at Carson. Chloroform was the poison used. Deceased was married to Mr. Kline at Sacramento in 1875; the couple had not lived together for several years: Kline is in Mexico.

Mr. Sanger says that while in Kern county recently he learned there were about sixty families who propose to come to Owens valley to settle. These people and many more hold back waiting to see what will be done about the extension of the C. & C. road south.

It is reported that quite extensive works will be constructed this spring on the shore of Owens Lake, east from Olanche, for the evaporation of lake water and gathering soda. The ground is said to be much better there for the purpose than anywhere else on the shore of the Lake.

Pap Walker can now dig up in his orchard as fine apples as ever were seen. It must not be inferred that trees at Olanche become so heavily loaded with fruit that they are crushed down into the ground; Pap picked the apples last fall and buried them, and now they come out as bright as his own wit.

John Keegan was dangerously hurt last Thursday. He was working at the bottom of a well behind Matlack's new blacksmith shop, when a stone fell from the surface and hit him on the head. Doctor Woodin says the skull is not fractured. Keegan is conscious and is not now in much pain; he is likely to recover in a short time.

Mr. James A. McKenzie, of Darwin, was a passenger on the down train last Wednesday. He went to Chicago two or three months ago; he made good use of his time while in that city, for he brought back a wife with him. Mrs. McKenzie will be heartily welcomed at Darwin and everywhere else in the county where her husband is known.

On Wednesday there was a big celebration at Merced, the occasion being the opening of a large resevoir near the town. From this resevoir the town will be supplied with water and several thousand acres of land will be irrigated. Every body in the town and surrounding country rejoiced in the completion of the work; no one had the least fear that the resevoir would burst and drown everybody.

Mr. A. Davidson, who arrived here from New York some weeks ago, is confined to his room by illness. He was suffering from muscular rheumatism when he came here; during the past two weeks the disease has caused him very great pain and made him quite helpless. At present there is some improvemint in his condition and it is hoped that with the returning warm weather he may continue to improve.

Unjust Taxation.

The present method of assesssment works great injustice to all who own property in the county, and who have located lands in the county upon which they have not proved up. The Tax-Collector will not receive part of the amount for which a taxpayer is assessed; the whole amount must be paid. When a land locator owns other property in the county the same will be liable for the tax assessed on the located land, and the locator must pay it; otherwise his other property will be seized and sold, or as much thereof as may be necessary to pay the tax. A locator who does not own other property in the county need not care if the land he has located is advertised as delinqent and offered for sale by the Tax-Collector; no one would bid anything at the sale because the title yet vests in the Government and such sale and purchase would be a mere idle form; it would not in the least interfere with the right of the locator to go on and perfect his title to the land and get a patent for it from the Government. A large number of such cases appear in the delinquent tax list this year; not one of these will return a cent of tax to the county; but each of them increases cost, as they must all be published, and these also give a false impression of the financial condition of the county to those who do not know the circumstances. When land is located under the Desert Land Act the locator pays a quarter of a dollar per acre, this being twenty per cent. of the Government price of the land. Yet the same land will be assessed to the locator at the full Government value of a dollar and a quarter an acre. If a locator must pay any tax on land before he has proved up and got a title surely he ought not to be assessed beyond the amount he has already invested in the land. This principle is observed in cases where property is mortgaged; the mortgagor and mortgagee must pay tax in proportion to their interest in the property. All locators should be forced to pay taxes or all should be exempt; it is grossly unjust that those who own other property in the county should be forced to pay tax on located land while those who do not own other property in the county escape taxation entirely. The fault is not with the officers but with the law.

A Brutal Murder

That was a frightful crime that was committed at Santa Ana, Los Angeles county, last week. Charles Hitchcock and his wife were people of the very best character, and both in the very prime of life. The murderer bought their home for $8,000; the deed was prepared; ninety dollars was paid to bind the bargin, and while professing to be only waiting for the rest of the money to be sent him from San Francisco, Anschlag with an ax killed both husband and wife, splitting their skulls as a butcher would the skulls of an ox. Anschlag, though a stranger to Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock, had been well entertained by them at their home; he knew that the deed transferring their property to himself was in their house and he evidently thought he could murder them, get possession of the deed, dispose of their bodies and enter upon possession of the property without querstion. As he has confessed the crime there need not be any delay in bringing him to trial and the gallows.

A Rough Trip.

About the time of the recent storms Schober's teams left Darwin for Paramint with supplies. There were five men, eighteen horses and four wagons. The usual time for making the round trip is seven days; but on this occassion it took sixteen days to make the trip. In Shepherd's canyon for a distance of seven miles most of the way had to be cut out of ice. This was slow work and had to be done with axes and picks. On places where the grade was not too steep the teams could go on by rough locking the wheels; but there are few such places in the canyon. It was a very hard trip on men and animals but was made without any of the men or animals being hurt.

Long or Short Haul.

The Dayton Nevada Times says that two car loads of potatoes were shipped from that place last week to Los Angeles. It may well be wondered at that the southern Eden should have to be dependent upon the so called "desert" for such an important article of food as potatoes. When the C. & C. road shall be extended, Owens valley can supply Los Angeles with all the potatoes that may be wanted. In this connection the "long" and "short" haul question comes up. Now the C. & C. road hauls the potatoes five miles: if the road were connected with Los Angeles there would be a haul of two hundred and fifty miles from Owens valley, or five hundred and thirty-eight miles from Dayton.

Wise and Brave.

There is a school teacher in Nebraska who deserves all the fame and praise that can be given here. Her name is Miss Minnie Freeman; she teaches in Myra valley. During the late stormy weather a blizzard struck the schoolhouse and the building was unroofed. Thirteen children were present at the time, the eldest being aged thirteen years and the youngest six. Miss Freeman tied all the pupils together by the arms with twine, three abreast. The youngest child she took in her arms, after tying the twine around her body. Selecting her way carefully, she led her little charges, with words of encouragement, through deep drifts and blinding blizzards to a farm-house, three quarters of a mile distant and all were saved.

Panamint.

Panamint is rapidly coming up as a busy and prosperous mining camp. At least forty men are now at work per the Surprise Mill and Mining Company. Most of these are getting out ore. Already a large amount of ore is on the dumps of the Company's mines; this will be delivered at the mill as rapidly as the pack trains can move it. According to last report from the camp the new mill would now be started up, as everything was in readiness for a start when the reporter left there. There is more ore in sight at Panamint than at any other mining camp within the knowledge of any one in this part of the country.

Agricultural Fair Settlement.

Last Thursday there was a meeting of the Directors of Agricultural District No. 18. The financial affairs of the Association for the year ending on the first of December last were settled up. After paying up all the running expenses, including premiums, pay for labor on grounds and race track and all contingent expenses, a small balance remained in the Treasury. This is a good showing for the first year. The State appropiation of $2000 was a big help.

During the past two or three weeks a piece of hard ground has been cutting through on the east side canal. This is about two miles north from Independence station. The ground is hard pan and stony and progress through is slow. The hard place will soon be all cut through and then progress will be rapid, as the ground is loose and the excavating machine moves it easily.

Wedding Bells.

A large company of invited friends gathered at the residence of Mrs. McCall, of Lone Pine, last Sabbath evening, January 29th, to witness the marriage of her daughter, Miss Ida Adams, to Mr. Stephen Decker. Early in the evening the guests began to arrive and continued to arrive until the great farm house was filled to overflowing. The rooms were beautifully decorated and every one seemed happy. At 8 p. m. the bride was presented to the groom. The happy couple were gallantly supported by Messrs. E. H. Edwards and J. E. Reynolds as groomsmen, and Miss Wimberly and Miss Rittgers as bride'smaids. The ceremony was pronounced by the writer and the newly made man and wife were presented to the company and congratulations followed. Supper was announced and fourscore guests proceeded to demolish a most inviting array of exquisitely prepared viands. After supper and song the company departed with oft repeated good wishes for the prosperity and happiness of Mr. and Mrs. Decker. Many presents, valuable, beautiful and useful were given to the bride.

REV. T. E. SISSON.

Study The Delinquent Tax List.

There may be many errors in the descriptions of parcels of land in the published delinquent tax list. But the Tax-Collector says he has been careful to copy accurately the descriptions as they appear in the books turned over to him and equal care has been taken in printing the list just as the Tax-Collector gave it. When the property on which taxes are delinquent shall be offered for sale it will be well for parties who bid for it to make sure first that the description in the advertised list is correct, otherwise they might be bidding for property to which they could not get title.

The Sack.

The usual count of money in the County Treasury was made on Thursday; the amount was found to be $22,978 10.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.

JOHN C. EVANS, SCOTLAND, MO., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take so much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house, if they had to take the feathers from under their wife and babies to pay for it."

JOHN R. DODGE, JR., jeweler, NORMAL, ILL., writes: "Tell ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. 1st. It is the best machine ever invented by man. 2d. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. 3d. If you run short, you can not buy ours for $100."

I will ship a sample to that desiring an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best washer in the world for saving labor, clothes and soap. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.

Queer Burial Customs in Europe.

The ceremonies for death and burial are alike for men and women. In the hour of death the face is turned towards Mecca or Jerusalem, and when the final moment comes the women of the harem, in regular succession, send forth shrill falsetto cries that rend the air and make the nerves quiver. This cry brings to the home the women of the village, who join in the lament for the dead. All are dressed in soiled, dark blue robes, and have faces, hands, breasts and even the walls of the house daubed with indigo. They unbraid their hair, and often pluck it out and lash themselves into a frenzy. Among the rich the clothing of the dead is strewn about the room, and the dishes and ornaments broken with great noise. Before the chill of death has fallen upon the inanimated form it must be carried to the tomb. The mourners follow the bier, which is covered with a cashmere shawl and carried on the shoulders of men. All are in soiled garments, with coarse cloth on the head.

The night following the burial, the men pass the hours with friends, smoking and drinking coffee, calm and resigned to destiny; the women spend the night in wailing and shrieking. On certain days the mother bewails her dead through the years, and on the festivals of the dead, families take their provisions and shawls and spend the night at the graves of their relations. After the death of a husband the widow must remain in the house a year, with all the covering of the furniture wrong side out, and the mirrors and ornaments covered. She does not offer refreshments to visitors, and the pipes are without their mouthpieces, and she must have, at stated times, professional waiters to perform in the house. The women beautify themselves by tattooing the face and breast; Coptic women have a cross or star tattooed on the arm. Lips are stained a dark purple, and finger nails and palms of the hands are colored orange with henna. Women of every class put a black rim under the eye, made with kohl, which is not injurious and besides lending size and force to the eye, gives it shade from light.—Alexandria Cor. Milwaukee Sentinel.

Facts Concerning Sponges.

The Mediterranean sponges are taken in the Grecian archipelago by men in diving suits, who go into much deeper water than they do in Florida. There most of them are taken with grappling irons, in the same way as oysters.

They can be seen with the eye on the bottom, clinging to the rocks. When one is dislodged another grows in its place in from six months to a year. A great many are also taken in the Bahamas. The market for that crop is Nassau, New Providence. Key West is the market for the Florida sponges, which are taken all along the coast. Trieste and London are the markets for the Mediterranean sponges. Some are taken off the coast of China.

"We had one once," said a dealer, "that inclosed a large jug. It was a fine sponge and had grown completely around the jug. They are frequently full of shells. When a sponge is first taken out of the water it is as black as ink, and it has to be treated by various processes until it becomes the color commonly seen.

"A sponge is the lowest order of animal life, if, indeed, it is animal and not vegetable. A number of minute animals live in it. The business is about half a century old in this country. Sponges are sold by the bale in this country, and by the case in Europe. They weigh from twenty-five to 100 pounds.

"When sold by weight the dealers are allowed to sand them about 25 per cent. Prices range from $10 to $150, the larger sum for very fine toilet sponges. There are many grades, such as silk, velvet, cup, glass, bath, surgeon and slate."—New York Mail and Express.

The Salmon of Kamchatka.

Hundreds of salmon were in sight, absolutely touching one another, and as we crossed the river our horses nearly stepped upon them. Their back fins were visible as far as we could see the stream, and aground and gasping in the shallows and lying dead or dying upon the banks were hundreds more. The odor from these decaying fish was distinctly perceptible at a distance of a couple of hundred yards or more. In weight these salmon varied from seven to fifteen and even twenty pounds. They were, for the most part, foul fish—bloichy, with patches of red and white, and the kind known by the Russians as the Garbusa; but others in fair condition were to be found, and with a little trouble I was able to pull out three good ten pound fish in as many minutes with a gaff. Any other method of fishing would have been useless. It would have been nearly impossible to make a cast without foul hooking a fish, and nine-tentias or more of them were in an uneatable condition.—The Cruise of the Marchesa.

Posture of a Sleeper.

It would seem on the first blush of the matter that the posture for—that is, to favor—sleep must be generally the same as that voluntarily or instinctively assumed during sleep; but a little consideration will make it apparent that this is not correct. It may be granted that, supposing a person to be sleeping lightly and uncomfortably, the posture will be changed half consciously to one of comfort. It would be more correct to say that it is changed in the endeavor to avoid distress or discomfort; but even the fact that sleep is quieter in the new position will not suffice to prove that this is a better one, because the sleep may meanwhile have become deeper.

It is, on the whole, impossible to ascertain, either by experience or observation, which is the posture most conducive to sleep, and attempts to lay down rules for the guidance of bad sleepers are always arbitrary, generally empirical, and rarely of any practical value. Those who think "anæmia of the cerebrum" is the cause of sleep, and those who think that, though not the cause, a diminution in the quantity of blood in the vessels of the encephalon is a necessary concomitant of sleep prefer and recommend that the head should be higher than the feet; while those who adopt the opposite view, and think passive congestion causes or promotes somnolence, would have the feet raised and the head lowered. The confounding stupor with sleep may, and probably has, something to do with these differences of opinion.

Meanwhile a common sense view of the subject would conclude that, as there is evidently some change in the blood state when the brain falls asleep, the best plan must seem to be to place the body in such a position that the flow of blood through the vessels of the head and neck may be especially easy and free. The way to secure this is to allow the head to lie in a posture and on a level that cannot offer any obstacle to the free return of blood through the veins of the neck, and does not tend to make the blood flow specially in any particular direction, but leaves nature at liberty to act as she will.—London Lancet.

ABSTEMIOUSNESS.

How Hindoo Workingmen Live on Fifty Cents a Week.

There is no abstemiousness in the world, and no thrift, like the thrift and abstemiousness of the average native of India. Almost alone among the workingmen of the world, he has raised himself nearly above wants, has stripped himself of all the impedimenta of luxury. Millions of men in India, especially on the richer soils and in the river deltas, live, marry and rear apparently healthy children upon an income which, even when the wife works is rarely above fifty cents a week and frequently sinks to thirty-six cents. The Indian is enabled to do this not so much by the cheapness of food—for, though it is cheap, a European who ate the same food would want five times the money merely to feed himself—as by a habit of living which makes him independent of the ordinary cares of mankind. He goes nearly without clothes, gives his children none, dresses his wife in a long piece of the most wretched muslin. Neither he nor his wife pay tailor or milliner one shilling during their entire lives, nor do they ever purchase needles or thread, which, indeed it is contrary to a semi-religious etiquette ever to use. The poorer peasant inhabits a hut containing a single covered room of the smallest size, with an earthen platform or two outside it; and as he constructs and repairs his own dwelling he virtually pays no rent, except for the culturable land. He never touches alcohol or any substitute for it. There is an idea in England that he eats opium or hemp; but he, as a rule, swallows neither—firstly, because he regards them with as much moral antipathy as any Englishman gentleman, and secondly, because he could not by any possibility pay for articles which in India, as everywhere else, are exceedingly expensive. He eats absolutely no meat, nor any animal fat, nor any expensive grain like good wheat; but lives on millet or small rice, a little milk, with the butter from the milk, and the vegetables he grows. Even of these he eats more sparingly than the poorest Tuscan. Once a quarter, perhaps, he will eat enough, during some festival, but as a rule he knows accurately what will sustain him, and would be enraged with the wife who cooks for him if she prepared more. He is assisted in this economy by a religious rule which we have never seen a Hindoo break, and which is undoubtedly, like the rule against killing oxen, a survival from a military law or custom of the most remote antiquity.—Spectator.

Taking Life Too Hardly.

A sprightly Frenchwoman, driving down Broadway lately, said: "Every man we meet looks as if he had gone out to borrow trouble, with plenty of it on hand." Baron von Lehren, a famous scholar who visited this country, observed the same peculiarity in the national temperament. "The Americans are the best fed, the best clad and the best housed people in the world; but the most anxious. They hug possible calamity to their breasts," he wrote of us. Our Scotch cousins, who have the same propensity for brooding over imaginary troubles, preach against it in many shrewd proverbs. "Never cross the bridge till ye come to the water." "The man who turns his fire into smoke will never be warm."—Youth's Companion.

A New Missionary Movement.

Orthodox Christians will watch with interest, and perhaps alarm, the new missionary movement in Germany. So called advanced theologians have a well organized society, whose object is to make use of the elements of culture and morality that are found in educated heathen nations, and on this basis build up a Christian culture according to advanced ideas. This society thinks that the old methods fail in that they do not interest the thinkers among educated non-Christian people. It has 7,750 members in Switzerland and Germany, and has a few men at work in Japan and China.—New York Sun.

Mrs. Swisshelm's Lost Type.

Some highly respected citizens of St. Cloud, Minn., in 1858, annoyed by the sarcastic and bitter sayings published in Mrs. Jane Grey Swisshelm's St. Cloud Visitor, revenged themselves by throwing all her type into the river. Recently the ancient printing material was found near the mouth of a canal. Mrs. Swisshelm died last year, and it is suggested as an appropriate thing to mold the type into some suitable emblem and place it at her grave.—New York Sun.

The World's Insects.

In a paper on injurious insects, Professor J. A. Lintner placed the total number of insect species in the world at 320,000. Of those found in the United States, 7,000 or 8,000 species are fruit pests, and at least 210 attack the apple. A borer which had hitherto troubled only peach and plum trees has begun to destroy the apple within the past two years. The successful fruit grower must be something of an entomologist.—Boston Budget.

—One of the performers at the menagerie of the market place of Montmartre, Paris, left his carriage at the gate to await his return. When he came out the coachman was not there. Thinking the man was gone for a drink to one of the saloons close by, he waited twenty minutes, at the lapse of which time he remembered that he had left his valise with four thousand dollars in gold in the coach. Opening the door of the carriage, he found his valise not gone but open, and about twenty-five hundred dollars gone, the remainder being still in the valise. Why the thief had left so much of it is not explained as yet.

—Captain W. D. Fitch, of Williamsburg, S. C., has a pocket-knife which was found in the gizzard of a large turkey gobbler killed at his place. The knife is three and a half inches long and about the size of an ordinary knife. The handle is made of dark-colored horn, and trimmed with bright metal at each end, which no doubt caused the turkey to take it for some kind of an insect. The handle of the knife shows signs of having been wasted by digestion. The turkey was healthy and fat. Captain Fitch's mother lost the knife. It is curious how such a large, hard instrument could be swallowed by a turkey, and how it could survive with it in its gizzard.

Sold Again.

"How much for that pair of pants?" he asked of a clothing dealer on Fort street east.

"Only two dollar, my frendt."

The stranger felt in the right hand pocket, gave a start of surprise and continued:

"Everything goes with the pants, I suppose?"

"How—what?"

"Say, old man, will you take $4 for these pants?"

"I—I—what vhas in dat pocket?"

"Will you take $5? Come, now, business is business."

"My frendt, I vhas sorry to tell you dot I haf made a great mistake. Dose pants vhas put out by occident."

"Say $6, then."

"Dey vhas my own Soonday pants, and of course I can't sell 'em. Please keep your hands off."

"Say, I'll give you $7! Seven big dollars!"

"No! no! Let go of dose pants! You believe I vhas sooch a fool dot I sell my own clothes off my back?"

"Say ten, then! that's a good feller—say ten!"

"Not by a shug full! It vhas a principle mit me dot I doan' sell my clothes. Gif dose pants oop to me or I calls der police!"

"Well, take 'em, old Injun! You'll be sorry for this!"

While the man was walking away the clothier turned all the pockets inside out in nervous haste, and the result was nix. His flushed face grew pale and his hair stood up, and he waved the pants high in air and called out:

"Ho! my frendt, come back! It vhas all a mistake some more! Dose pants vhas yours for twelve shilling!"

But the stranger never even turned his head.—Detroit Free Press.

He Did Not Reduce the Bill.

A man who had just set up in the hardware business and who had been a clerk where the eccentric millionaire, Stephen Girard, had been in the habit of trading, applied to him for a share of his patronage. Girard bought of him, but when the bill was sent in he found fault and marked down the prices.

"Cask of nails," he growled, "which I was offered for so and so. You have charged so and so, and you must take it off."

"I cannot do it," said the young merchant.

"But you must do it," roared Girard.

"I cannot and will not," was the final reply.

Girard bolted out, apparently in a rage, but soon after sent a check for the whole bill. The young man began to relent and say to himself: "Perhaps he was offered them at that price, but it is all over now. I am sorry I did not reduce the bill and get it out of him on something else. His trade would have been worth a good deal to me."

By and by Girard came again and gave him another order. The young man was very courteous and said he was almost sorry he did not reduce the former bill.

"Reduce a bill!" exclaimed Girard, "had you done it I would never trade with you again. I merely meant to see if you had cheated me."—Detroit Free Press.

A LUCKY MAN.

William Leslie wins a $5,000 Louisiana Lottery Prize.

The last drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery has rendered at least one San Franciscan happy, and he is William Leslie, who resides with his family at 2,505 California street. He had the good fortune to hold a one-tenth ticket in the second capital prize of $50,000, his share being $5,000 the money being drawn through the agency of Wells, Fargo & Co. on November 22d.

A reporter yesterday called upon Mr. Leslie, who is employed in the typecasting department of Palmer & Rey's type foundry, at 407 Sansome street, and requested him to explain the circumstances that attended his good fortune.

"Well, sir," said he with a smile, "I bought my ticket from a fellow laborer of mine just two days before the drawing, paying him $1 for it. I do not generally invest in lottery tickets, and when I bought this one that won $5,000 I had no idea of the good fortune that awaited me. Imagine my astonishment when, upon picking up the Chronicle the day after the drawing I saw that my ticket 69,368 had won a prize. My investment was a good one and I have no reason to complain."

"What will you do with your money?" asked the reporter.

"I don't know yet, though I expect to go into business for myself at an early day."

Mr. Leslie is about 35 years of age, an industrious workman, and is well liked by all who know him. His good stroke a fortune has not yet completely turned his head and doubtless will not. Though earning a good salary as typecaster, it is likely that with his new-found wealth he will engage in mercantile pursuits, for which he has a great liking.—San Francisco (Cal.) Chronicle Nov. 30.

Punctilious.

A gentleman in a suburban town went to call upon a lady whose family occupied one-half of a double house. The front door of the two parts opened upon the same stoop. At one of the doors the gentleman pulled the bell. The door was opened by a servant, who answered the inquiry for Mrs. S—— by directing the caller to the other door.

The visitor then turned to the bell pull on the adjacent door post, and in a few moments that door was opened by the same servant, who solemnly replied to the second inquiry regarding Mrs. S—— by saying that the lady was not at home.

This incident is matched by another that took place in Vienna; rather more than matched, in fact, for the person who played two parts in the comedy had a special mood and temper for each part.

"My friend was in Vienna," said a traveler. "He had taken from here a letter of credit on one of the best known banks and he wanted to draw on it. So he sought the agency of the bank in Vienna. He walked into an office which had a big barricade in front of a long desk and two small holes cut for the convenience of customers. He walked up to the first of them. A man came up. He handed the letter of credit to him. The man looked at it and said very gruffly: 'Next window.'

"My friend went to the next window. A man came up, took his letter of credit, looked at it, smiled pleasantly and said: 'That's all right. How much do you wish to draw, sir?'

"It was the same man."—San Francisco Chronicle.

ST. VITUS'S DANCE CURED.

FARMINGDALE, L. I., N. Y., Sept. 2, 1885.

I have been troubled for several years with an affection of the nerves which no doctor or no medicine could cure until I tried BRANDRETH'S PILLS. I would be taken with a violent pain in the middle of my spine, and my arms and legs would twitch violently. It acted something like St. Vitus Dance, for I couldn't control my limbs. It would come and go once or twice a month, lasting two or three days at a time. Finally, at the beginning of one of my attacks, I took five BRANDRETH'S PILLS. As soon as they acted freely I found myself almost well. So I continued taking them for a month—one or two a night. It is now a year since I have had an attack, and I attribute my cure to BRANDRETH'S PILLS. FRANCES WOOD.

A PLEASANT VOICE.

According to Elihu Burrett It Is a Light That Sings as Well as Shines.

When one is born with an uncomfortable voice it requires so much watching and training that very often you give up the task and declare it hopeless. One of the greatest difficulties is to find out how your own voice really does sound. Sometimes people go through life without ever knowing that they have dreadful voices. One's friends never care to volunteer unpleasant information, and even your bitterest enemy doesn't take the opportunity of flinging this particular disagreeable truth in your face. The writer recalls a friend, a lady over fifty, whom she has known since childhood, and whose voice is of that peculiar ear-piercing quality that penetrates the aural nerve like the friction of steel upon steel. It commences pretty high up in the gamut, and keeps on ascending until—if she happens to be very much in earnest—it invariably ends in the steeliest upper note, like the "ping" of the highest violin string. She is a good friend, and a noble-hearted, conscientious Christian woman, but after one hour of her you are even willing to trade her off for a real bad, wicked little wretch with a soothing voice.

The first thing to consider is the necessity of having a kind voice. A kind voice is always a sweet one. It allays irritation and soothes one down sometimes quite as effectively as the touch of a soft, cool hand. Elihu Burritt once said: "Watch it day by day as a pearl of great price, for it will be worth more to you in the days to come than the best pearl hid in the sea. A kind voice is to the heart what light is to the eye. It is a light that sings as well as shines."

There certainly is much more attention being paid to this branch of culture than ever before. How quickly we can tell a cultivated voice even at the end of a telephone wire. It is soft, velvety in quality, and is undulated so as to embrace a variety of tones. Of course the telephone is not always a test, because a short woman usually has to stand on her tippoes and screech in order to be heard at all. But doubtless one, by simply putting her ear to a keyhole, could tell in a few moments the social caliber and degree of cultivation of a whole company of people without seeing them at all, so much is there in a voice. Generally an untrained voice goes with an untrained intellect and passions. If an individual has perseverance and character enough for one she will have for the other.

"But where," says my lady, "lies the remedy, if one is never to know how her own voice sounds?"

Try first asking your friends, if you can pitch upon one with the courage of his convictions. If you can not, or you distrust the verdict after it is given, go to a good elocutionist and pay him to tell you the truth. If you know your bad points, you can probably remedy them yourself. If you can not, then any thing which will help you to tone down a high voice, deepen a nasal one, or soften a gruff intonation, will be well-spent labor and money.—Detroit Tribune.

COWARDLY BEASTS.

The Real Nature of America's Large Carnivorous Quadrupeds.

The prevalent idea entertained by those not familiar with the real nature of our large carnivorous quadrupeds, believe their instinctive ferocity impels them to assault every person they meet, is not sustained by practical experience.

Those animals appear much more formidable in the distance than when approached in their own native wilds.

But few Eastern sportsmen would, it is believed, voluntarily attack a bear, wolf or panther, yet I have seen and killed many of those animals, and not one of them ever turned upon me.

And in further corroboration of this, my guide, "Little Bat," who has during his lifetime killed over eighty grizzlies, assured me that all he ever met invariably ran from him.

So confident was he of his ability to cope with these much-dreaded monsters that he did not hesitate to hunt them when alone and on foot, and only two years ago he encountered four grizzlies eating a dead elk upon Casper mountains, when he crawled to within short rifle range and shot every one of them without moving from his tracks, and upon another occasion, while we were hunting in the valley of the Big Horn, he went out alone during a moonlight night and shot two grizzlies from behind a tree.

Panthers and wolves are most arrant cowards, and the traditional story of General Putnam having performed an extraordinary feat of courage by entering a cave and shooting a wolf is extremely laughable when contrasted with the fact that my wife upon one occasion, in the night time, at a frontier post, when a large black wolf had purloined one of her turkeys and was dragging it off, hurried out and with a stick made him drop the bird and run away.—Outing.

—A young man covered with the dust of travel walked into a recruiting station in Portland, Me., the other day, and wanted to enlist. He was examined and rejected because he weighed only one hundred and twenty-six pounds. He said that he had walked from the northern part of the State; that he weighed one hundred and thirty-five pounds when he started and that he thought he would fat up some if he had a chance. The recruiting officer told him to call again, and in less than a week he did, and had gained so decidedly in flesh that he was readily accepted.

TEXAS JOURNALISM.

A Salutatory Announcement Which Can Not Be Misinterpreted.

A Texas journalist, who had been summer-fallowing himself on a stock ranch for a couple of years, suddenly assumed control of a country weekly, and in the first issue after he struck the quarter deck, he published a small and unpretentious card, in which he said:

"The former editor of this sheet is practically and politically dead, but the Sausage still survives. It is just as well, though, and a mighty sight better, as I am a hoss at editin', and sling one of the most caustic and fluentest quills west of the Red river. I have a record behind me which doesn't need a new coat of whitewash every spring, like that other editter, which recently peunked and drawed out of the game.

"At gitten up obituaries I'm a tossel top, and if there's any hitch in the programme I can generally furnish a fresh corpse on short notice, and at the usual slight advance on cost of insertion. I merely throw this out as a feeler to the opposishun, which, I hear, is a-massing its forces agin me and my paper, and, by the freckled-faced, bow-legged, cock-eyed gods of war, there'll be a power of high-priced opera music floating in the air, if any of them try to clime me.

"If there is enny corte-house ring in this sweet-scented locality, I'll get on to it, as sure as you're a foot high. If there is to be any munkying with the free-born, untrammeled country delegates to the next county convention, I'll be there with my face washed and hair combed back of my ears.

"I've licked many a good man, and I've been licked once or twice in my variegated career, but I've always noticed that them fellers who whipped me were not the same men afterwards, and drooped along for a while like a sunstruck tomato vine, and finally dropped into the grave with a dull thud, having kinder outlived their usefulness.

"I want it distinctly remembered that I'm in from the back counties, and ain't up to the cote etiket of the strawberry blonde or the pulpy dude. If I make any miscues it will be more an error of the head than the heart, but for all that I propose to run a jam-up, sizzling hot, nifty little paper, and move along with the best kind of harmony; but if harmony bucks and tries to do any sort of dirt on me, harmony will have to git off the track and let me glide right inter the confidence of the public.

"If this journal says any thing out of the way and grieves any mottle-faced tender-foot, remember I'm the man he wants to see about it. There ain't no back stairs or back windows to this sanctum sanctorium. I'm always in. I'm ever on the tripod, and now with these few brief remarks I cordially invite every body's co-operation and subscriptions. The tone of the paper will be pure in sentiment, chaste in expression and typographically bang up and delirious."—Texas Siftings.

ALUMINUM BRONZE.

How It Might Be Utilized in the Manufacture of Guns.

A recent meeting of the Naval Institute at Annapolis was held to discuss a paper on the subject of aluminum bronze for heavy guns, which had been prepared by Alfred H. and Eugene H. Cowles at Cleveland. Many of the most distinguished metallurgists and ordnance experts in the country were present. Mr. A. H. Cowles read the paper. For safety, he said, the metal in a gun should have the property of stretching much beyond its elasticity, and thereby the danger of violent explosion is greatly diminished. Assuming that the gun carriage takes up the recoil, a perfect gun might be described as a gun of medium weight and simplest construction, which shall discharge without permanent distortion, and thereby be enabled to throw a projectile with maximum energy. This is how he would make the gun: The gun would be cast in an iron mold of a grade of aluminum bronze, castings of which have a higher texile strength and ductility than the finest quality of mild steel forgings. The solid gun would then be bored and conical chilled steel mandrels of gradually increasing diameter successively driven through the bore. The metal around the bore, by this process of cold stretching, would thereby have greater strength and hardness, a higher elastic limit, and a greater elastic extension. It would be impossible to burst such a gun with four times the powder pressure now used in the "built up" steel guns. The wall would be solid, and there would be no crystallization. The finished gun would have the color and luster of gold. It would not be corroded by salt water or eroded as much as steel by the powder gases. Plants for producing aluminum bronze and casting the guns would not require more than one-third as great an outlay in capital as it is proposed to invest in plants for the construction of "built up" steel guns, and not one-quarter of the time would be necessary to build either aluminum plants or guns. In conclusion Dr. Cowles said that were our Government at the present time enabled to make the great advance referred to in the art of fabrication of guns, the present armaments of Europe would be rendered valueless against us. Cast guns, he said, can be made from aluminum bronze at its present cheapened price at twenty per cent. less cost than forged guns of steel, and sixty per cent. of this cost is capital stored away in the metal of the gun, which can be remodelled and used over an indefinite number of times. This, he said, was not the case with steel guns, which, when once destroyed, are a total loss, ninety-eight per cent. of their cost being in their fabrication.—N. Y. Sun.

FOREIGN GOSSIP.

—It takes 14,800,000 gallons of oil a year to keep the railways of Great Britain going, and the cost is nearly $2,000,000.

—The telegraph line in Northern China has been finished. The prefect, together with the necessary complement of men, commenced building the line on the 15th July, and by the 5th of August they had advanced as far as Po-tu-ch'eng. From the latter place the line was carried across the Sung-hua river, and thence to the Amoor river, where the terminus was reached at Tsitsikar.

—The great killer of snakes in South Africa is the secretary bird, a gray bird with long legs, whose name is derived from its projecting feathers on the side of the head, which look like quill pens. Snakes constitute the principal food of the birds, and thousands are killed by them. The snake is first disabled by a severe blow with the feet or beak, and then carried up to a great height in the air, whence it is allowed to fall and be crushed on the earth below. The secretary bird is protected in Cape Colony on account of its services in thus destroying venomous serpents.—N. Y. Ledger.

—The hope of zoological London is at this moment a young gorilla brought from the Gaboom, and in stature and bulk about the size of a boy of thirteen. His room is warmed constantly to a temperature of seventy-two degrees, and he has clean straw for his couch, and the most tempting delicacies in sweetened pudding and bananas, but he has no appetite and is evidently in doleful grief at having been kidnapped from his native forests. A most amiable and accomplished female chimpanzee lives next door, but even the dulcet tones of her amorous confabs with the keeper have not a single charm for the homesick gorilla.

—A foreign paper gives the official report of the head officer having charge of woods and rivers in Belgium, from which it appears that the total length of highways in that country amounts to 4,227 miles, of which there are already planted more than one-half, or 2,417 miles, with 264 miles yet to be planted. The present value of the trees is now four times as much as their original cost, or have a money value of more than $2,000,000. Among the trees thus planted elms are in the largest numbers, then oaks, next poplars, and in diminishing numbers are ash, beech, maples, Norway spruce and larch. Fruit trees are in much smaller numbers.—Chicago Times.

—At the present time there are nearly three thousand soldiers of the Russian army under treatment for ophthalmia in the hospital at Odessa. Diseases of the eye are very common in the Russian army, and are caused by the excessively hot, rainless and dusty summers and the dazzling glare of the steppes in winter. One would suppose that when ophthalmia is so prevalent Russian medical men would be especially well posted about it, but this is not the case. The greater number of these ophthalmic patients in the army are never treated by a qualified practitioner, and little is ever done either to relieve or cure them.—N. Y. Tribune.

WOMEN OF TURKEY.

Mr. S. S. Cox Discourses on the Functions of the Chief Eunuch.

Writing of the harem, Mr. Cox says that, excepting the husband, no man is allowed to enter it. "It is a cardinal sin," he adds, for a woman to appear with her face uncovered before a stranger. If she happens to be about the house or in the garden when a stranger, be he Mussulman or foreigner, unexpectedly enters, she snatches for any thing handy, a handkerchief, a pillow or even a dish with which to hide her face. The Sultan alone enjoys the privilege of free access to every harem, and then all the men in that harem have to stand before his Majesty with their faces uncovered. When the eunuchs accompany the ladies on their expeditions the latter drive always in closed carriages, the eunuchs following afoot or on horseback, with a lash in their hand, which comes down like lightning on any foreigner who approaches too near. Turkish ladies, however, are no less artful than their European sisters, and eunuchs, now-a-days, are not hopelessly incorruptible.

"The office of Chief Eunuch of the Imperial Palace is a very important one, and the holder of it ranks equally with the Grand Vizier and Ministers of State. He is often admitted to the privy councils of the Sultan. His title is very grandiose sounding. He is styled 'His Highness the Guardian of the Gate of the Imperial Felicity and Repose.' He is the head of the household of the Sultan. Of him and his functions, which are many, I may add that he is considered almost as much of an attraction and saluted with as much consideration as a first-class bull-fighter in Spain. He is often the object of lyric poetry. Why? Because he has an influence on the Sultan, and thus upon politics. This influence he exerts, often, through the women of the harem. When he is inaugurated at the palace there is much display. He rides to the palace on a fine horse. His decorations glitter on his breast. He is received by the aides of the Sultan. Lambs are slaughtered as a token of welcome, and servants look up to him as a demi-god. The emblem of his office is a silver pastoral staff. Why pastoral? Does he not care for the lambs? He becomes 'Aga of the Sublime House of Ottoman,' by which title he is designated in his commission."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

BILL NYE AS A PLAYWRIGHT.

He Describes a New Opera of Which He Is the Author.

I HAVE just returned from a private rehearsal of a new operetta of which I am the author, and hasten to write a fair, honest criticism of it for the press. In this criticism I shall try to be perfectly frank to mention any defects, and yet I shall try to avoid hurting the author's feelings. I want to score the operetta with a merciless hand, and yet I do not wish to give myself needless pain.

The operetta itself is called "The Singed Cat," because it is really so much better than it seems to be. The music was composed partly by myself and partly by a count who plays on the ferryboats in summer and has his winters to himself. He does not wish to have his name used, because, as he says, he is afraid that "foreign powers will get on to it and make him come back to attend to the count business again." He says it is very disagreeable to be a count and live on a long, slim pedigree and what the neighbors bring in from time to time.

The orchestra opens the performance with a selection from the "Flying Dutchman." Difficult as it may appear, the orchestra makes a good selection from this gentleman, and it is played well after everything is ready. It takes some little time for an orchestra to get ready, however. The man who bites off the first joint of the clarionet breathes a few liquid notes, the first violin sounds "A" and the gentleman with the bassoon looks up into its dark recesses to see if any cayenne or kittens have been deposited there since he played last. The superintendent of the large violin stands it upon end and feels of its staccato. He then chalks his bow and the leader whispers in a low voice to the man who salivates the cornet. The snare drum soloist gets his assortment of drums into a semi-circle, hangs his triangle where he can get at it, runs his eye over the xylophone, sleigh bells, bird call, picket fence, bones, castanet, cymbals, Swiss bells and fortissimo. The leader writes his autograph in the atmosphere with his stick and the band goes into committee of the whole with a wild snort. A difficult piece then follows. Some of the audience are heard to state that they wish it had been so difficult that the orchestra could not have played it.

The curtain now rises, and a primary school of over 800 pupils is seen passing in review across the stage, singing a song of forty-nine verses, meantime going through a system of calisthenics. In making one night stands with "The Singed Cat," most any primary school will do with a few rehearsals for the chorus. Get these children secured in advance and all their parents will come to see how the children look on the stage. I thought of this myself.

THE SOPRANO.

A beautiful soprano now comes on, accompanied by her voice, and wonders where Felix is. She decides to sing a small song while waiting for him. The song is an arpeggio with diatonic scales on it. It begins low and fluttering, like the cry of a wounded clay pigeon, and gradually soars upward, like the price of coal, and ends with some artistic gargling which suggests a warble in the upper register.

As she gets more confidence in herself she becomes more irritated because Felix did not get there at the same time he said he would.

The prima donna of the "Singed Cat" has a pleasant voice, full of timbre and fine allegro movement, bordering on the andante. Mr. Riley, who has heard her, says that when she pulls out the last joint on her crescendo and opens her upper register, her mouth looks not unlike a stab in the dark. She sings with the whole arm movement, and her action is good as she goes by the judges' stand. She has a selection in the second act called "Back to Our Mountains," in which she starts off with a ritard in which she emits a chest note which tests the acoustics of the hall, that she is tickled to get back to her mountains, such as they are, and is pleased with the altitude. She has assisted in "The Damnation of Faust," but otherwise her conduct has been good. She is a widow, her husband being deceased. He was listening to the song of a buzz saw near Stillwater, Minn., in 1875, and got an idea that the saw had something confidential to communicate and desired to take him apart for that purpose. Anyway, he was in that condition when they found him. For that reason her music is frequently tearful and often solfeggio in spots. Her repertoire is very large and has a lid on it. The only criticism that I feel warranted in making, and I hate to do that, is that she has slightly ruptured her voice by trying several years ago to sing a duet with herself and thus draw two salaries.

When the applause has died away Felix comes in with a baritone voice and diminished triad. He thinks of the first verse while the piccolo makes a few desultory remarks, and then he explains how he could not get there when he agreed to because the jury disagreed, or something of that kind. He swallows an imaginary clam with the shell on it, and begins in a low, passe roundelay which develops into a duodecimo run. He is accompanied by a running mate, consisting of a flute with a large red mustache over the main entrance.

FELIX.

"The Singed Cat" will be produced at the Polo grounds early in January. Let there be a full house.—Bill Nye in New York World.

—The Presbyterians of New York City are talking about raising a fund of $1,000,000 for ministerial relief, and it is desired to have the amount pledged before the centennial of Presbyterianism in 1888.

—In studying the Word of God digest it under these two heads: either as removing some obstructions that keep God and thee asunder, or as supplying some uniting power to bring God and thee together.—Cecil.

—A writer in a recent number of the Chautauquan, who, as editor of a New York paper, has had long experience in the examination of manuscripts, states that Princeton graduates show the best training in English, and write the least like amateurs, and Harvard students rank next. His observations embrace at least twenty institutions.

—The Ladies' Association of the Established Church of Scotland raised $31,785 in 1886, and in its mission in Africa, India and China they support 12 European missionaries and 98 Eurasian and native workers. In their 33 schools are 2,463 scholars, and 400 Zenanas welcome the visits and teaching of their Christian agents.—Public Opinion.

—The following statistics have been published of London: Aggregate midsummer population, 5,416,006; total church sittings, 1,903,509—a proportion of 35 per cent. to the population. Of this 35 per cent. the Establishment supplies 4.95 per cent. and the free churches 50.5 per cent. It is estimated that not more than one-half the accommodation is actually used for public worship.

—The Congregationalists at Naugatuck, Conn., are erecting a parish house with twenty-four rooms, besides hall, cloak-rooms and closets. The first floor has an assembly-room, reception-room, Sunday-school, library and seven class-rooms, and on the second floor eight class-rooms, reading-rooms, kitchen, dining-room, coat and cloak rooms. On the third floor will be the pastor's study and a room for a gymnasium.—Public Opinion.

LOW-TONED FICTION.

Women the Most Prolific Producers of Questionable Literature.

Many of the novels now published may be classed under the above heading, more especially those written by inferior novelists. Women are great offenders in this respect, some honorable exceptions shining out among others like stars in a cloudy sky. Every day sees some novel issue from the press, and chronicles the plunge of yet another aspirant for literary fame into the crowded arena to swell the lengthy list of authors. It is a sign of the times that what are termed "racy" novels are the most run after by the fiction-reading public, and consequently those most readily accepted by certain publishers. In this money-getting, money-grubbing age some publishers and authors seem to have met on common grounds in pandering to a vitiated public taste, and producing books which will not bear the test of being read aloud in the home circle. Among the worst offenders in such novel-writing are women, who choose risque subjects to write on, and dwell with a minuteness of detail on topics which the purer-minded of their sisters would hesitate to speak of. There are exceptions, as we have said—women who do not degrade their talents, but write with a purity of purpose books which it is a pleasure to read and re-read. Can any one, looking at the question of nineteenth-century light literature from an unprejudiced point of view, say that the style of writing now is an improvement on that which obtained a century ago? The novels of those days were decidedly coarse, their plainness of speech corresponding with the habits and customs of the period; but books were then written with the laudable intention of showing up the vices of which they treated, and, if possible, checking such vices by pungent and scathing satire, thus being in advance of fashionable modern society novels, which, though more refined in speech, are more destructive to morality, in that the authors gloss over sin, picturing it in alluring colors, wrapping it up in sensuous word painting, and, while professing to disapprove, yet setting it before youthful imaginations in any thing but its hideous reality; or else write in such a matter-of-fact, every-day-occurrence sort of light of vice as to rob it of its actual criminality.—Chambers' Journal.

MEMORY IN THE BLIND.

A Letter of Peculiar Interest by a Writer Deprived of Sight.

As partial compensation, in the midst of his many discouragements, the sightless pupil possesses one vital advantage over his companions. His memory, accustomed to seize and assimilate definitions and miscellaneous information at a single hearing, acquires both a marvelous alertness and a phenomenal retentive capacity which enable him to master certain branches of study with singular ease and rapidity. Deprived of books and without any very ready and reliable method of making notes, he obtains a habit, often envied by the seeing, of appropriating instantaneously any thing addressed to his intellect through his hearing. Hence the proverbially good memory of the blind person. His mind is his memorandum book, always at hand and always open.

To the present writer, who never remembers having a lesson in any thing read over to him more than twice, nothing is more strange and more amusing than a room full of school children, with fingers crammed in their ears, buzzing over a lesson of three pages for the fifteenth time. Equally incomprehensible is it to see a man making a note of a single address, or a lady referring to a shopping-list. Such observations force one to the conclusion that the art of writing, invaluable as it is, has been a disastrous to the human memory. People have grown to so rely on a piece of white paper covered with black scratches, that if this be lost or misplaced, they are reduced almost to the condition of creatures without intellect.

So marked is the advantage of the blind in this respect as almost to atone for their extra difficulties in others; that is, the sightless pupil will acquire scientific and philosophical studies with a rapidity which will counterbalance the greater amount of time demanded by his less facile methods of writing out exercises in linguistic and ciphering in mathematical branches; so that in taking the regular course at academy or university, he will require, all in all, neither more time nor more labor than the average student.

Of not less value in after life is this extraordinarily trained and developed memory. It enables the blind to derive from lectures, conversation and general reading ten times the benefit of others, on whose minds a single mention of facts and thoughts makes little or no impression.

Thus the law of compensation is seen working in all things, making good on one hand, approximately at least, what is wanting on the other; not by the special mysterious interference of Providence or other power with natural conditions and processes, for the benefit of the individual, as many claim, but through the inevitable sequence of cause and effect, by which senses and faculties become, through unusual training, abnormally developed and their value radically enhanced.—Century.

A PAVEMENT OF GOLD.

One of the Most Interesting Incidents of Grant's Great Western Trip.

The war had been over about two years when General Grant made his famous trip to the West. The only railroad reaching Denver at that time from the East was the Union Pacific, and such a thing as transportation by rail through the mountainous regions was unknown. When Grant was in Colorado he expressed a desire to see as much of the country as possible. The grandeur of the mountain scenery seemed to fascinate him. He was taken to the top of Pike's Peak, only a short distance from Denver, and was so much pleased with the trip that he expressed a willingness to take a longer one. Central City, the county-seat of Gilpin, was then the leading mining town of the State. It was distant eighty miles from Denver, and every mile of the road was through canyons and over mountains. Grant would go. The only means of transit was by stage, and the General was furnished with a special coach, his friends following in another. Relays of horses were provided at the end of every ten miles, but then the trip was tedious, and before it was half finished the General complained of the slow progress. At the top of a mountain the driver, being a little vexed, asked the General if he was really anxious for faster time over that kind of a road. Grant said he would like to get to Central some time. The driver said he would "let 'em go," and giving the lines a twist around the brake he braced himself with nothing in his hands but the whip. The coach went swinging and surging down the mountain faster than it was ever taken by four horses before. Grant's companions followed on as fast as they could, expecting to find him dead at the bottom of the mountain. He was not hurt, but wanted no more races down the mountain side. The arrival at Central was a great event for that little mountain city. The miners turned out to honor the General, and from every housetop bunting was displayed. Arrangements were made to entertain the party at the Teller House. The bankers of Gilpin County had met and decided that the General should walk over a pavement of pure gold. Enough gold bricks were in the different bank vaults to make a pavement two feet wide from the main entrance of the Teller House to the curbing where the stage would stop. It was put down on the morning of the day of his arrival, and when the door of the coach was opened the General stepped out on solid gold, and walked a distance of thirty feet on the most precious and costly pavement that was ever laid down for the feet of man to tread on.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

FORMIDABLE WEAPONS.

What Destructive Genius is Doing to Make War Impossible.

When first the torpedo came in sight as an effective weapon of war, its destructive possibilities at once placed a check upon nations disposed toward hostilities, and since then the improvement in topedo service and the construction of torpedo boats have menaced the navies of the world. But this was only the beginning of a series of inventions in gunnery, projectiles and explosives which, if they continue at the same rate for another generation, will make war actually impossible. For under the new conditions a resort to arms will be little short of the certainty of annihilation. The torpedo boat, as shown by recent tests of our Navy Department has seen its best days. By the use of the electric light, a vessel can pick out the swiftest of these assailants while yet at a distance sufficiently great to insure its destruction. The self-moving torpedo, however, which can be sent long journeys beneath the water, under the direction of an operator at a distance, is still a dangerous weapon, capable of indefinite improvement in its efficacy. But it is in other departments that the progress of destructive ingenuity is most marked.

We have commented upon the work done by the new dynamite gun, which proved itself capable of discharging with accurate aim six pounds of dynamite against a target from one to three miles distant. That this can be improved to greater distructiveness can hardly be doubted. At the same time it is announced that a method of packing dynamite shells has been discovered, by means of which they may be discharged from ordinary cannon, with as much ease and safety as if they were the common iron sphere. Even this does not mark the farthest advance of invention. The Russian government is now guarding carefully the secret of a reported new explosive, which has been named "slectover." The peculiarity of this alleged new form of gunpowder is said to be that it explodes by expanding in one direction, and that in the course to be taken by the projectile. Ordinary powder exerts its expansive force in all directions, so that immensely thick and heavy guns are necessary to withstand the rending influence of a discharge. With the new explosive, expanding forward only, the construction of artillery would become of little importance. It is said that a heavy missile was actually discharged by this means from a cardboard tube, without material injury to the weapon. If artillery can be made light enough for easy transportation, and if a charge of dynamite or the still more powerful explosives of recent note can be substituted for shot and shell, no army, no fortifications and no ships-of-war could withstand an attack by such machinery. Already the enormous cost of maintaining war equipments has proved the most powerful advocate of peace known to mankind. Destructive genius will yet make war altogether impossible.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

COURTING BEAUTY.

Two Illustrations of How American Girls Go About It.

The handsomest woman I ever saw was one who took great care of her health. When I knew her she was over thirty, but no girl of sixteen that I have ever seen had rosier cheeks or brighter eyes. Of course she was naturally fine-looking, but the attention she gave to matters of hygiene added to and preserved her beauty. What did she do? I don't know that I can recount all, but I remember her telling me she took a sponge bath every morning; was particular about the ventilation of her apartments; took long walks when she could; ate but little meat, much fruit and cereals whenever she could get them. Another thing she did which she tried without success to get me to do; she drank her coffee without milk or cream, diluted with water.

The reason she took her coffee so was because her physicians had told her it was healthier to drink it in that way. Whether the practice added to her physical charms or not I don't know. On the whole she was certainly repaid for her systematic habits, and as certainly there was nothing arduous about the performance of them. Nor was there any thing bizarre about as, it seems to me, there is about the following account I read of a Chicago belle: "To keep the suppleness of her figure she stands one hour daily, fifteen minutes at a time, with hands on her hips before a long mirror, and bending her knees out from each other she sinks slowly down toward the floor as low as possible, then as slowly uprising; meantime moving her arms in any direction to their utmost length, out or up, forward or back, until when she stands erect they are ready to be placed on her hips again. Each movement is repeated, every time a little accelerated, until the end of thirteen minutes it is done quickly and a fine color is in her cheek. She then lies down on a perfectly flat couch, without a pillow, until her breath comes smooth and regular, as it will in the two minutes left of her quarter of an hour. When she plays a good deal of tennis she cuts down her exercising one-half." Of course the benefit to be derived from this mode of procedure is not to be questioned, whatever may be thought of it besides. It is easy to see that her whole body thus receives good exercise, adding to the grace of her form, beautifying her complexion, and making her strong and healthier.—San Francisco Post.

TAKE SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

For all Diseases of the Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Spleen.

This purely vegetable preparation, now so celebrated as a Family Medicine, originated in the South in 1828. It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. Is hereby given that unless the foregoing taxes and costs

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11 .....1888

Mr. James Jones, of Big Pine, was in town on Thursday.

Mr. Henry Rhine is again in charge of the telegraph office here.

Mr. I. P. Rittgers, of Lone Pine, was in town some days this week.

Mr. James C. Crocker has returned home to Big Pine from a trip to Kern county.

Chas. McMurry came down from Big Pine and remained in town several days this week.

John Alexander took a lot of supplies along and started for Panamint last Wednesday to work a mining claim.

Mr. S. P. McKnight has been engaged all the week surveying land near Independence Station.

Mr. J. J. Moore, County Treasurer, has moved into the house he formerly occupied on Edwards street.

Samuel Randall has openly expressed his preference for San Francisco as the place for holding the National Democratic Convention.

Around town there is much activity in making gardens. Rhine, Wood and Chenot have plenty of seeds of all kinds at their several stores.

Robert F. Morrow, the jury briber, has been acquitted by the Sonoma county jury, but he has been convicted by the public opinion of the State.

State Surveyor-General Hammond reports that in Inyo county over eight thousand acres of land are tied up by the Benson fraudulent surveys.

Mr. H. M. Yerington made a trip to the lower end of the C. & C. road last Tuesday. He traveled by special train and was accompanied by Mr. R. J. Laws.

Mrs. Naylor, of Big Pine was taken suddenly ill last Monday. Dr. Woodin was summoned from Independence by telegraph. She is now getting along all right.

Mr. C. A. Parsons, of Round Valley, came to town last Monday and returned north this morning, having spent the week visiting with friends in the neighborhood.

Miss Naylor returned to her home at Big Pine last Tuesday morning. Her work as telegraph operator in the office here was very satisfactory to everybody who had business there.

Lately Mr. S. G. Gregg got fifty-two dollars from the Postoffice Department at Washington. This was a balance due him from when he was Postmaster at Big Pine six or seven years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. I. Isaacs left Independence last Tuesday morning for New York, going by way of Mojave. Mrs. Isaacs is mother of A. W. Eibeshutz. The old people had been here for several months.

A formal invitation is extended to the ladies of this vicinity to be present at a Leap Year ball given by the ladies of Big Pine at Crocker's hotel on the 29th inst. There is a full list of committees and every detail is carefully attended to.

At the end of last week surveyor McKnight made a resurvey of a portion of the Stevens ditch. He found that by a change in the line a good deal more land could be included. The change will not cause any more expense. Work on the ditch is progressing rapidly.

Mr. John Shepherd has two of the finest jacks ever brought into the county. The animals are aged but sixteen and seventeen months respectively and already they are much above the size of the average jacks. Parties who intend raising mules should go and see these animals.

A large weighing machine will be ready for business in a few days on Edwards street. Mr. J. C. Irwin ordered the machine from New York; it will be placed nearly in front of his place of business. This will be a much needed public convenience: actual weighing beats guessing.

Last Friday a man named Henry Barrett was killed in a mine near Benton. He had been working alone; a charge of giant powder exploded and killed him. The body was not found till Monday and was buried Wednesday. Barrett was unmarried; he was a native of Iowa and was aged about forty-seven years.

The Hailey, Idaho, papers say that miners' wages in that country were reduced to three dollars a day from and after the first of the present month. Many miners were leaving the country and the papers say it will be a dull year in Idaho. Men prefer to work in other States and Territories for three dollars, as the cost of living is not so great as in Idaho.

Mr. W. Walker, of Olancha, has presented to the cabinet of the 18th Agricultural Fair the head of a mountain sheep. The animal was killed a few weeks ago by Mr. Walker near Olancha. The horns measure five and a half feet from tip to tip following the curve, and are thirteen inches in circumference at the base. The mountain sheep is now very rare and is likely soon to become extinct on the Pacific coast.

The Virginia Enterprise says the Union Pacific people are now moving in earnest to push through to the Pacific. The Utah Southern road will be pushed through until it joins the Atlantic & Pacific at Barstow. The road will enter Nevada at Bristol Pass, near Pioche, thence will run through Pahranagat valley to Ashmeadows. There is good farming land on the proposed route, and a rich mineral region. Ashmeadows is near the upper end of Death valley. The proposed route would go through the great borax fields of Death valley.

A Contemptible Mail Service

Very little mail reached Independence on Wednesday. The trouble was at or beyond Reno. Our mail service appears to be completely demoralized. It is an outrage upon the public the way in which the mails are now served and have been for some time past. There is no branch of the public service for which the people are more willing to be taxed than for the mails; it is only stupid and stubborn perversity that will stint or hamper that service. Independence is a county seat and the business centre of a wide area; yet it has but three mails each week from San Francisco and the East. This is simply robbing the people of their just rights. The English give better mail service than this in parts of India where mails have to be carried on horseback, and even by messengers running on foot. Where there is a railroad and the managers willing, and even eager, to carry the mails for the most reasonable compensation it is hardly to be endured that we should have such wretched mail service.

Clifford D. Fitch Wanted.

Clifford D. Fitch is wanted at Rochester Pennsylvania. I. W. Fitch writes that Clifford is needed at once to assist in settling up an estate that will leave him some money. The missing man was at Keeler last September and is said to have gone there from Virginia City, Nevada. The missing man or any one who knows anything about him, should communicate with I. W. Fitch, whose address is given above.

The Divorce Case.

The divorce case of Elliott vs. Elliott came up for trial in the Superior Court last Monday. The defendant withdrew his demurrer and made no opposition to the granting of a decree of divorce, which was given by the Court and the marriage between the parties was dissolved. Mrs. Elliot is given "full charge, control and custody" of a child born since the parties were married, till said child shall arrive at the age of seven years; and the defendant is ordered to pay Mrs. Elliott seventy-five dollars each year for the support of the child till it shall arrive at the age of seven years. The defendant is allowed by the judgment of the Court to see the child while it shall remain under the control of the mother on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week. The plaintiff is allowed all the outstanding accounts as the proceeds of business transacted by both parties while the marriage relation existed between them, as well as all personal property purchased by said parties during the same time, and also all improvement made on the Baker ranch, with certain exceptions. The plaintiff is adjudged to pay all just and proper debts which the parties contracted during the time of the marriage relation. The plaintiff also to have half the hay now in stack on defendant's timber culture claim; also two-thirds of all the meat, two-thirds of all the flour, and three-fourths of all the seed grain now on hand. The defendant is given the right to occupy and live in the cabin now on the Baker ranch for two months from the date of the decree. The defendant is restrained from interfering with or annoying the plaintiff in her person or property. The defendant shall have the custody of the child after it shall arrive at the age of seven years and till he shall reach the age of fourteen years, and during that time the mother shall have the right to visit her child at any and all times. The defendant is to pay the costs of this action.

Poor Shooting.

Last Monday afternoon several pistol shots were heard in Chinatown. Under-Sheriff Thurston and a Justice of Peace were quickly at the scene and a Chinaman arrested; the same day he was tried for assault, plead guilty as charged and sentenced to be confined in jail fifty days or pay a fine of fifty dollars. Several Chinamen had been gambling Sunday night; two of them quarrelled over the game and one of them was run out of the house. Next day this same man was passing the house when the man who had quarrelled with him the preceding night shot at him and several shots were exchanged but nobody hurt. The punishment may seem very light for such an offense; but if the charge had been assault with intent to kill the man must have been held for trial before the Superior Court, and this would have cost the county not less than a thousand dollars, and possibly much more. The Chinamen are quite ready to use their pistols on each other, but unfortunately they are not good marksmen.

Mining Sale.

The Dark Horse mine, near Bishop Creek, has been sold. The buyer is Mr. William Charles, as agent for other parties. The mine was owned by four parties, two of whom are J. G. Birchim and F. P. Blaisdell, both of Round Valley. A good deal of prospecting has been done on the Dark Horse and a very large ledge has been developed, said to be about sixty feet wide. The ore is low grade but there is an immense amount of it, it is easily mined, and there is an excellent site for a mill and an abundance of water. A very large mill will likely be built soon and the mine worked on an extensive scale.

Post Office Needed.

There is much need for a postoffice between Alvord and Bishop Station. Along both sides of the river there are settlers who have to travel many miles to get their mail, some to Big Pine and some to Bishop Creek. New settlements are constantly being made and the numbers will increase rapidly before long. A convenient and central location would be at Warm Springs; no doubt Mr. Collins would take charge of the office for a time and it would not cost the Government one dollar of additional expense.

Our Ox Gored.

The Supervisors of Mono county have passed an ordinance imposing a license tax on horses, mules, jacks, jennets and cattle. The tax on cattle will be twenty-five cents per head; and on the other animals named it will be forty cents per head. About ten thousand head of cattle from Owens valley are taken into Mono county every summer for pasture; the tax on these will be twenty-five hundred dollars. This licensing business is not an unmixed good for Inyo.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.

JOHN C. EVANS, Scotland, Mo., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take as much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house. If they had to take the feathers from under their wife and babies to pay for it." JOHN R. DODGE, JR., jeweler, Normal, Ill., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. 1st. It is the best machine ever invented by man. 2d. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. 3d. If you run short, you can not buy ours for $1000." ## "ALL NATIONS WITNESSES."

The Wonderful Mistakes of Scientists and Educators.

"Prove all things" seems to be the guiding maxim of the people of this age.

This would be all right, were it not for the "know-alls" in every community, who are sure that every introducer of a new idea is a "crank," and that every new invention is "utterly impracticable."

The astonishing fact is that in this class educated men and scientists are found. In the days of George Stephenson, the perfector of the locomotive engine, the scientists proved conclusively that a railway train could never be driven by steam-power successfully without peril; but the rushing express trains all over the world show how mistaken they were. There went up a guffaw of laughter at Professor Morse's proposition to make the lightning of Heaven his errand boy, and it was proved conclusively that the thing could never be done; but now all the news of the wide world by Associated Press, put in your hands every morning and night, has made all nations witnesses.

Rev. Dr. Talmage in one of his sermons says: "If ten men should come to you when you are sick with appalling sickness, and say they had the same sickness, and took a certain medicine, and it cured them, you would probably take it. Now, suppose ten other men should come up and say: "We don't believe that there is anything in that medicine." "Well," I say, "have you tried it?" "No, I never tried it; but I don't believe there is anything in it" Of course you discredit their testimony. The sceptic may come and say "There is no power in your religion." "Have you ever tried it?" "No, no." "Then avaunt!" "Let me take the testimony of millions of souls that have been converted to God, and comforted in trial, and solaced in the last hour. We will take their testimony as they cry "We are witnessess!"

The proprietors of Warner's safe cure have received over 10,000 voluntary testimonials to the efficacy of that medicine. These have come from almost every civilized country, and they may fairly claim "it has made all nations witnesses."

The evidence comes from all classes. The highest medical authorities, like Dr. Robson, late surgeon in the English navy of London, England, and Dr. Wilson, editor of "Health," and clergymen of the highest reputation like Rev. Dr. Rankin, ex-Chaplain of the U. S. Senate, and Dr. Kendrick of the Rochester University, one of the international revisers of the new testament, are among the published witnesses.

Hundreds of these testimonials have been and are being published. They can be easily verified. A standing offer of $5,000 for proof that any one of them is not true, so far as the proprietors know, is a fair guarantee of their genuineness.

If a man is suffering from any one of the ailments, of which there are so many, growing out of kidney derangement, is it not more than foolish for him to refuse to try Warner's safe cure when thousands testify they have been cured by it.

Think of it!

The men who refuse to believe that anything can be valuable because it is in conflict with old ideas and methods are the men who "get left" in this world and go before their time to try another.

Anarchy in Turkey.

It is remarked that Mussulman pilgrims returning to Constantinople from Mecca bring with them slaves of both sexes, procured by them at the request of friends. The ministry of police, notwithstanding the prohibition by the sultan, feigns ignorance and tolerates this illicit traffic. By the aid of pilgrims the regular slave traders carry on their nefarious business. It is believed that this convenient pretext of pilgrimage to holy places is largely resorted to for the promotion of slave dealing purposes, with practical impunity. This is only another among the numberless signs of the anarchy which is rapidly gaining ground in the country. In the interior there never have been such a want of authority, such lawlessness and such wretchedness among the poorer classes. It is not only the population, however, which defies the governors and officials, but the officials themselves evince a contemptuous disregard of the central authority, being well aware of the condition of things in high places at Stamboul. —Constantinople Cor. London Times.

The Sport of Seal Killing.

A gentleman stood in front of a furrier's store contemplating the seal garments that filled the windows.

"I never see a seal coat," he said, "that I am not reminded of a heart-breaking day I passed among the seal killers."

Then he told of joining an expedition, when he was a young man, and going out for the sport of seal killing. They knocked the pretty creatures on the head. The seals are so tame, affectionate and fearless, that when the hunters landed and came among them they crowded round them like dogs, making their little, friendly bark and fawning upon the murderous hands that proceeded to stretch them bloody corpses upon the beach. The man related how sick at heart he got; how he tried to get away from this massacre of the innocents, and to this day a sealskin coat recalled his wretched experience as a murdering criminal among the seals.—New York Cor. Chicago Herald.

A Steam Catamaran.

A novel craft is being built in Montreal. It is a steam catamaran, each of the cigar shaped hulls being of steel, sixty-five feet long, and built in two compartments, one being for water ballast and the other for coal oil, which will be used for fuel. Two vertical engines will furnish the power to two propellers, which are so arranged that they will lift themselves out of the way when the hulls strike floating ice or other obstacles. The boat can be taken apart and packed on a ship, and is intended for whale and walrus hunting in the Artic regions. It will carry a gatling gun and a powerful electric battery.—Cleveland Leader.

Coffee Not Injurious.

"It is nonsense," said a chemist, "to say that coffee is injurious on account of the caffeine in it. Caffeine is an alkaloid, which, taken in larger doses, would produce nervous troubles and other serious consequences, but is present in coffee in such infinitesimal quantities that it is perfectly harmless; on the contrary, it is to caffeine that coffee owes its tonic properties. If coffee is injurious it works very slowly, for thousands of people who use it to excess live to a good old age. They say Voltaire drank forty-eight glasses of it a day."—Philadelphia Times.

A Safety Lamp Needed.

Three thousand dollars is offered by Mr. Ellis Lever of England as a prize to the inventor of a miner's safety lamp, and it has set to work the wits of the ingenious. Sir Frederick Abel will lecture on the subject during the present month in England, and probably will exhibit specimens of lamps which the Swan & Edison company are manufacturing for a large colliery in England. Electricity, it is said, is most likely to solve the question and take the money prize first and lots of profit after.—New York Sun.

A Peculiar Locomotive.

A peculiar locomotive has just been manufactured in Boston, and will be tested on the Boston and Lowell railroad. It has but one driving wheel on each side, and these, instead of being perfectly round, have a periphery composed of a series of plain facets connected with each other by very obtuse angles. It is claimed that the flat surfaces will give greater adhesion to the track and make the engine more powerful than any herctofore constructed.—New York Press.

Herbert Spencer at Tennis.

It is curious to think of Mr. Herbert Spencer's playing tennis. One would have as soon expected to see Carlyle at battledoor and shuttlecock. A few years ago, however, Mr. Spencer used frequently to lay down his pen and lift a racquet. His brain was overworked with less than an hour's writing, and it became quite a common thing with him to seek relaxation in the tennis court. Before he became so much of an invalid Mr. Spencer also went a good deal to the theatre—always to the pit, into which he enjoyed fighting his way.—Book Lore.

Accompanying High Civilization.

Cancer is not a disease due to misery, to bad sanitary surroundings, to ignorance or bad habits. On the contrary, it is a disease of the most highly civilized, the most cultured, the wealthy, and of localities which are the most salubrious. One of the characteristics of cancer is that, unless the brain is involved, it leaves intellectual power and force unimpaired. Nay, it seems that in some cases it almost increases these qualities.—New York Tribune.

Catching Rattlesnakes.

A novel industry has been started by boys in the San Monica mountains in California. They catch rattlesnakes by means of a slip noose of cord, box them up and take them to Los Angeles, where they sell them. The Chinese are the purchasers. They use them as medicine, and the snakes sell for from fifty cents to $1 each. It is said that the Chinamen handle them fearlessly and never get bitten.—Chicago Herald.

Five Years Without Winding.

A clock has been invented, and is coming into use in Europe, which is warranted by its manufacturers to run for five years without either winding or regulation. The Belgian government placed one in a railway station in 1881, sealed with the government seal, and it has kept perfect time ever since.—The Argonaut.

Evolution of Words.

It is interesting to trace the evolution of words and expressions. Cultivated people say: "How do you do?" Those who are less precise say: "Howdydoo?" In the backwoods of Tennessee they say "Howdy?" The noble red man of the west says "How?" While the cat on the fence says "Ow?"—Norwich Bulletin.

A Wagon with a Sail.

A Dakota genius has invented a three cornered or flying jib sail which he attaches to an ordinary light wagon in such a way as to catch the wind, sending the vehicle over the streets or the prairies at the rate of ten or twelve miles an hour.—New York Tribune.

STUDY OF MESMERISM.

SOME VERY CURIOUS EXPERIMENTS MADE AT THE CAPITAL.

Journalist Croffut's Exhibition of Skill in Hypnotism—Suggested Burglary Committed by a "Sensitive"—Not So Successful with Another Subject.

W. A. Croffut has recently taken up the study of mesmerism, or hypnotism, as the scientists prefer to call it. Mr. Croffut has developed considerable skill in this direction, and the other night gave an exhibition at his house before a noteworthy audience. Among others present were Postmaster General Vilas and his family, Senator Ingalls, Senator Platt, of Connecticut; Gen. A. W. Greely and his wife, Admiral and Mrs. Russell, Mr. Coleman, the commissioner of agriculture; Col. Nicolay, marshal of the United States supreme court; Gen. Bryant, assistant attorney general; Professor Thompson, of the geological survey, and a number of other scientific gentlemen and physicians. Before beginning his experiments Mr. Croffut explained that he had been very much interested in reading, in Paris letters, of the experiments conducted by Drs. Charcot and Luys in Europe.

VICARIOUS CRIMINALITY.

Mr. Croffut remarked that the experimentation with dangerous drugs and medicated compounds under scientific conditions would be postponed to another evening, but he would immediately make tests as to the vicarious commission of crime. After performing some minor experiments and getting his subjects into a good condition, Mr. Croffut attempted the feat of compelling a fellow being to commit a crime by the force of his own will, acting upon the will of that fellow being. One of the subjects, a young woman employed in the government printing office, was told to go into the audience and pick the ladies' pockets. She manifested great horror of the act and refused, but by an imperative command the mesmerizer induced her to comply, and without much display of ingenuity she got a phantom purse, not a real one, from Mrs. John C. Fremont. The experiment was not satisfactory as to the practical employment of an agent.

Another sensitive, a clerk in a department, was mesmerized, and Mr. Croffut explained to him that in a house of one of the neighbors, in an upper chamber, in a certain corner and a certain drawer in the dressing case was a pocketbook which contained $5,000. He described the situation of the house minutely, the way to go there, the arrangement of the dressing case and so on, repeating it over several times until the subject had the geography impressed upon his mind. Then handing him two keys he said:

"The larger key will open the front door of the house and the smaller key will open the drawer of the dressing case in which the pocketbook will be found."

He told the young man that if he would steal that pocketbook he would give him the money. There was a good deal of discussion between the mesmerist and his subject concerning the liability of discovery and arrest, but when assured that there was not the slightest possibility of anybody interfering with him, and that there were no dogs about the place, he consented to undertake the burglary. Four or five gentlemen in the room were asked to follow the subject on his trip. Due arrangements had previously been made with a neighbor to place the pocketbook in the situation described. The young man ran out into the street, turned the corner, and when he came to the house described by Mr. Croffut recognized it at once by the description. He then began to show the greatest degree of agitation, looking nervously behind all the tree boxes and around the corners, and finally jumped over the fence, saying to those who accompanied him as "pals"—of whose presence he seemed only half conscious—that he did so lest the gate should make a noise.

NERVOUS AND CAUTIOUS.

When he reached the porch his nervousness seemed to increase, as well as his caution; but he unlocked and opened the door quietly, crept into the hallway, looked round all the corners and into all the rooms, found his way up stairs into the apartment described, drew out the key, unlocked the drawer indicated and found the pocket book. He was starting away with it, when one of those who accompanied him called his attention to the fact that he had left the drawer open, and that he had better restore things as he found them. He replied that that was a good idea, and doing so, put the key in his pocket. He then crept around the room, looking into other places, and when asked why he did so, replied that he was looking for something else he could steal. One of the party suggested to him that it was a bad place to steal anything but money, for jewelry could be traced while money could not. This seemed to strike him as sensible, and he remarked that the pocket book was full of bills, and he had better be satisfied with what he had got. Then he crept down stairs with great caution, shut and locked the front door carefully after him, and reaching the street, started to run like a frightened deer. One of his attendants caught him by the arm and asked him where he was going. He said he was going home, but the attendant suggested he must return to Mr. Croffut's house and give him his share of the money. The mesmerized thief stopped a moment and said: "Yes, it would be mean not to give him his share; he put us on to the job; we will go back and deal square with him."

He returned to Mr. Croffut's house, handed that gentleman the pocket book and counting out $5,000 in imaginary money, divided it equally between the two.

This experiment seemed to demonstrate that, proper conditions existing, crime may be committed second hand through mesmeric influences.

With another subject Mr. Croffut was not so successful. He convinced a young man that his brother had been killed by an Indian, whom he was advised to murder in revenge, and was told that he could find him on the Capitol steps. The sensitive, though generally obedient under mesmeric influences, refused to believe such an absurd story, and after a long argument with Mr. Croffut, in which the subject showed as much shrewdness as the operator, declined to attempt the deed he was urged to commit.—Cor. New York Tribune.

A Misleading Premonition.

A negro woman of Pulaski, Tenn., told her friends that she would surely die at 7 o'clock on a certain evening. So about fifty of them gathered around her bed and shouted and prayed and sung in an ecstasy of religious fervor as the hour drew near for the soul to take its flight. But it didn't do it. On the contrary, the woman went into an apparent trance, from which she arouses occasionally to eat a square meal.—New York Sun.

Cost of Rare Orchids.

European flower collectors have visited all the countries in South America in search of rare orchids, and during six months of the present year $8,659 was paid for these curious plants in one town in Venezuela.—Chicago Times.

Diamonds are found at present in five counties of California, as follows: Amador, Butte, El Dorado, Nevada and Trinity.

TOO UTTALY UTTA.

I'm called an esthetic young man,
And wude people say I am silly;
I carway a wose and a fan,
And dine on the scent of a lily;
I'm touched with the bwie a bwac cwaze,
A plaque sets my heart in a flutta,
I'm sweet and wefined in my ways—
In fact, I'm decidedly utta;
Yes, utta;
In fact, I'm decidedly utta.

I dwess in a pictuwesque style,
My costume is simple and soulful;
My face weahs an esthetic smile
That's half idiotic, half doleful.
I've nothing in common with those
Wude people who spwing from the gutta;
But that's too absurd to suppose—
I'm quite too decidedly utta;
Yes, utta;
I'm quite too decidedly utta.

On wising I pwactice awhile
In fwont of my miwow each mawning,
To catch the expwession and smile
That ignowant people are scawning.
And when through the city I pass
I set the gurls' hearts in a flutta;
Though some of them call me an ass,
What mattahs it while I am utta?
Yes, utta!
What mattahs it while I am utta?

He Wanted a Pie Eater.

He was courting a mission girl and had been invited to dine with the family on Sunday. He noticed that his adored one did not eat much, and remarked to her that her appetite was light.

"O, yes, Mr. Yardcash," replied the fair one, "I am not a large eater. Ma says I cost less to keep than any of her children."

"You'd orter seen her stuffin' down pie and cheese afore dinner," said her young brother. "She's giving you guff."

The lady of the house arose in her place, and, looking the young man full in the eyes, said firmly: "Mr. Yardcash, my daughter told you the truth. She is not a large eater. Her brother, John Henry, has been reading the funny papers and thought he would try a joke on us. His father will have the kindness to attend to him upstairs. My son must not grow up to be a liar."

"Why, ma," ejaculated John Henry, "didn't I hear you tell Tillie to eat a good lunch and not give her appetite away before her young man?"

"No, my son, you did not"——

Five seconds later boyish screams were heard from an upper room.

"Ma," said Tillie suddenly, "it's a shame to whip that boy. He told the truth, and I won't see him whipped for all the dry goods clerks on Kearney street—that I won't," and she flounced from the room, while Mr. Yardcash remarked to her mother: "It's a bad policy for a mother to meddle with her daughter's affairs. If you think I want a slim waisted, consumptive faced wife you are away off. Let her eat."—San Francisco Post.

He Started.

A rag peddler who was driving up Gratiot avenue yesterday had reached Hastings street when his horse balked. The usual number of smart Alecks were soon on hand with their advice, and one suggestion after another was tried in vain. The horse could neither be pulled nor pushed, and as he was blockading traffic the crowd began to grow very rapidly.

"What is it?" inquired a boy of 12 who pushed his way into the circle.

"Balky horse," answered some one.

"Where's the owner? Here, you man, can't you start this horse?"

"No, he don't start opp."

"Wait a minute."

The lad ran up the street half a block and pulled a handful of hay out of a bale at a feed store, and when he returned he cleared a space in front of the horse, stood off about five feet and extended his hand. The horse pricked up his ears, his eyes glistened, and he at once advanced and followed the boy around the corner.

"It's according to the hoss," explained the boy as the crowd cheered. "When a hay fed hoss balks he wants firecrackers under him; when a hoss who is fed on scrap iron and gravel roof balks, a pinch of hay will lead him all over town."—Detroit Free Press.

Fancy and Realism.

Little Nell—Mamma, I wish you'd let me read a novel.

Omaha Mamma—Don't mention such a thing.

"But novels tell things just as they are in life, don't they?"

"Yes. Now ask no more questions."

"Susie Minks is got such a lovely novel, and"——

"What! Did you read any of it?"

"Only the last line. It said: 'And so they got married and were happy ever after.'"

"Oh, that isn't a novel, dear; it's a fairy story."—Omaha World.

Doubtful Accommodation.

Browne's employer was calling his attention to the sales of another traveling man, and intimating that he ought to try and do as well.

"I tell you what it is," said Browne, "it's all in the territory a man has to travel. Now any fool can sell goods in that territory."

"Well," replied the merchant, thoughtfully, "I think I will start you out on that route next month."

READ THE DEATH ROLL

Which the bills of mortality of any large city may be fitly designated, and you will find that renal and vesical maladies, that is to say, those that effect the kidney or bladder, have a remarkable prominence—we had almost said—preponderance. Bright's disease and diabetes in the chronic stage are rarely cured, and gravel, catarrh of the bladder and enuresis slay many. Yet at the outset, when the trouble merely amounts to inactivity of the organs involved, the danger may be nullified by that pleasant renal tonic and diuretic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which imparts the requisite amount of tone to the organs, without over-exciting them, and the use of which is convenient, and involves no elaborate preparation. Dyspepsia, a usual concomitant of renal complaints, and debility, which they invariably produce, are remedied by it. So also are constipation, malarial, rheumatic and nervous ailments.

THE LATE SHIPWRECKS OFF CAPE HORN.

Extract of letter from David James (late master), of the bark Colorado of Glasgow.—"Having lost our ship on Staten island, on the 5th of July last, and having saved neither effects nor provisions, we were then compelled to travel over the island for ten days, subsisting on nothing but sellfish and seaweed. On the 19th of July we came across another shipwrecked party of seventeen, the surviving part of the crew of the British ship Dunskeig of Glasgow, fourteen having perished through exposure. Now, the ship was lost on the 23d, of June, and a lot of the cargo, consisting of EPPS' COCOA, was washed, ashore out of the wreck. There was nothing saved except the cocoa, and we, numbering twenty-five men, were kept alive on it up to the 20th of August, when we were rescued by the steamer Mercurio of Buenos Ayres, and landed there on the 13th of September.

"Too much praise cannot be given to this cocoa for the preserved state that it was in, after being in the bottom of the sea, in the wreck of the Dunskeig, for a fortnight, and then washed ashore, and lying on the beach and rocks of Staten island for about six weeks, subject to the exposure of the severest weather on the face of the globe.

"The island is situated in a region of perpetual ice, snow and storms, and after all this test it was as fresh and dry as if in the works.

"As we had a good stock of it there, we used it in a liquid state for drink, and also made it in a thick state, like porridge, and we also baked it on the fire, which made splendid bread and kept us alive and warm on this barren island."

THE PRESIDENT OF THE NEW YORK STATE SENATE.

For expediting legislative business, Edmund L. Pitts, the President of the New York State Senate, stands almost without a peer. Such a place as he holds is a most trying one and requires great powers of endurance. One of Mr. Pitts' ablest supporters will be seen in his letter given below:

STATE OF NEW YORK, SENATE CHAMBER,
ALBANY, March 11, 1886.

I have used Allcock's Porous Plasters in my family for the past five years, and can truthfully say they are a valuable remedy and effect great cures. I would not be without them. I have in several instances given some to friends suffering with weak and lame backs, and they have invariably afforded certain and speedy relief. They cannot be too highly commended. EDMUND L. PITTS.

OVER-WORKED WOMEN.

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers, and ever-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent Specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. ### HIS PHOTO.

The venerable benefactor of mankind, intent upon his good works, is known as we see him here. His familiar face and form have become a trade mark, and the good he has done is illustrated in the following marvelous instance: Jan. 17, 1883, George C. Osgood & Co., druggists, Lowell, Mass., wrote: "Mr. Lewis Dennis, No. 136 Moody st., desires to recommend St. Jacobs Oil to any afflicted with rheumatism, and desires especially to say that Orrin Robinson, of Grantville, Mass., a boy of 12 years, came to his house in the summer of 1881 walking upon crutches, his left leg having been bent at the knee for over two months and could not be bent back. He could not walk upon it. Mr. Dennis had some St. Jacobs Oil in the house and gave it to him to rub on his knee. In six days he had no use for his crutches and went home well without them, and he has been well since St. Jacobs Oil cured him." In July, 1887, inquiry was made of the Messrs. Osgood to ascertain the condition of the little cripple, which brought the following response: "Lowell, Mass., July 9, 1887.—The poor cripple on crutches, Orrin Robinson, cured by St. Jacobs Oil in 1881, has remained cured. The young man has been and is now at work every day at manual labor. Dr. George C. Osgood, M. D." No other remedy can make the same showing.

AN ECCENTRIC NABOB.

How John I. Blair Manufactured Money When He Needed It.

Soon after the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western railroad was extended over the Pocono mountains into the Lackawanna valley, John I. Blair, the eccentric millionaire of Blairstown, N. J., came to Scranton every month to pay a portion of the railroad men. The vehicle from which he distributed cash was a lumber wagon, which was drawn from one part of the road to another by a team of old plugs. Mr. Blair liked to circulate the bills of his Blairstown bank as far away from home as possible, and the most of his payments were made in his own bank notes. Whenever he ran out of money he put a board across the deep wagon box, hauled a lot of sheets of unsigned bank notes out of his iron trunk, sat down on the bottom of the wagon, and began to make more money by placing his peculiar autograph on the crisp notes.

Moses Taylor, who was one of the heaviest stockholders in the road, came to Scranton frequently. Nothing about the road and the shops and mines escaped his eagle eye, and one day he noticed Mr. Blair making money on the board. He watched the process for a while, and then he stepped up to the wagon and said to Mr. Blair:

"John I., have you any idea how large a circulation your bank has got?"

"Guess we ain't got a cent more in circulation than we kin redeem in specie. Your bank don' have to ask more than once for gold for our bills, does it? We ain't turnin' out any more'n we've got the metal to back up, are we?" squeaked Mr. Blair, continuing to sign.

Several years ago each freight train on the road had a crew of a conductor and three brakemen. Mr. Blair saw a chance to economize by taking one brakeman from each freight train, and he caused an order to be issued to that effect. In consequence of this the conductors were obliged to assist in switching cars, and before the end of the year a number of them had been injured. One shockingly profane conductor had both legs cut off while he was making up his train in the Scranton yard one day. He laid the accident to Mr. Blair after he became conscious, and he swore fearfully about Mr. Blair's penuriousness up to within a few minutes of his death.

At his church in Blairstown one Sunday Mr. Blair placed his old-fashioned silk hat in the end of a pew next to the aisle and went to another part of the church to seat people. While he was away a very fat old woman, who was not a regular attendant, waddled in and helped herself to a seat without looking to see whether there was any thing in the pew or not. She sat right down on the millionaire's hat, but she wholely unconscious of the fact, and she continued to sit there until Mr. Blair had finished his duties. Then he began to search for his plug, and when he got to the fat woman he looked discouraged. He peered into several pews in front of her, and then he went back and asked her to rise. She did so, and there was the hat as flat as a flapjack. Mr. Blair struggled with his emotions as he held up the ruined tile, and the fat woman was so embarrassed she couldn't utter a word. Looking her straight in the face and holding the hat at arm's length, Mr. Blair said:

"God bless you, my good woman."—N. Y. Sun.

An Economical Battery.

To make a cheap, simple and efficient battery, suitable for the use of experimenters and amateurs: Take an ordinary glass fruit jar, fitted with a cover of wood or hard rubber, and place in it a number of pieces of electric light carbons, hundreds of which can be picked up in the street every morning after the lamps have been trimmed. The connection between the carbons and the binding screw on the top of the cover is best made with a gutta-percha covered wire, having its lower end bared and wound tightly round and secured to one of the carbons, thus making a connection with all other pieces in contact with it. A piece of amalgamated zinc of any convenient size or form is suspended within the jar from the wooden cover, and has a binding screw attached to it. The jar should be filled about two-thirds full with dilute sulphuric acid or other suitable solution. The whole battery complete can be made for twenty cents, and it will give a good current on a closed circuit for a long time.—Boston Budget.

He Dazed the Landlord.

"I desire to retire," said a Boston guest to the proprietor of a hotel in Arkansas.

"You which?" asked the dazed man.

"I desire to retire."

"You what?"

"I desire to retire."

"Well—I—I—I'll be durned if I believe we've got it in the house, mister."

"Got what?" said the amazed guest. "I didn't ask for any thing."

"Well, say it again an' see if I kin ketch on."

"It's strange you can not understand plain English. I simply said I desire to retire, that is, I wish to go to my room."

"O—aw—O! That's hit? You wanter turn in, eh? Why n't you say so? We don't know nothin' 'bout 'desirin' to retire' here in Arkansas. We just put off to bed."

And when he came down-stairs he said to his wife: "If that's the way they talk in Boston it ain't no wonder there's so many fools there. 'Desire to retire!' Well, I'll be durned!"—Tid-Bits.

BILL NYE IN WASHINGTON.

His Financial Embarassments Briefly Touched Upon in a Personal Letter.

[Personal.]

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
ALONG TOWARDS MORNING, 1887.

Cashier World Office, New York:

MY DEAR SIR—You will doubtless be surprised to hear from me so soon, as I did not promise when I left New York that I would write you at all while here. But I now take pen in hand to say that the senate and house of representatives are having a good deal of fun with me, and hope you are enjoying the same great blessing. You will wonder at first why I send in my expense account before I send anything for the paper, but I will explain that to you when I get back. At first I thought I would not bother with the expense account till I got to your office, but I can now see that it is going to worry me to get there unless I hear from you favorably by return mail.

When I came here I fell into the mad whirl of society, and attracted a good deal of attention by my cultivated ways and Jeffersonian method of sleeping with a different member of congress every night.

Congressmen and their wives are daily landing at the great national Castle Garden and looking wildly around for the place where they are told they will get their mileage. On every hand all is hurry and excitement. Bills are being introduced, acquaintances renewed and punch bowls are beginning to wear a preoccupied air.

I have been mingling with society ever since I came here, and that is one reason I have written very little for publication and did not send what I did write.

Yesterday afternoon my money gave out at 3:20, and since that my mind has been clearer and society has made fewer demands on me. At first I thought I would obtain employment at the treasury department as exchange editor in the greenback room. Then I remembered that I would get very faint before I could go through a competitive examination, and, in the mean time, I might lose social cast by wearing my person on the outside of my clothes. So I have resolved to write you a chatty letter about Washington, assuring you that I am well and asking you to kindly consider the inclosed tabulated bill of expenses, as I need the money to buy Christmas presents and get home with.

My idea was that board and lodgings would be the main items of expense, but I struck a low priced place where, by clubbing together with some plain gentlemen from a distance who have been waiting here three years for political recognition, and who do not feel like surrounding themselves with a hotel, we get a plain room with six beds in it. The room overlooks the District of Columbia, and the first man in has the choice of beds, with the privilege of inviting friends to a limited number. We lunch plainly in the lower part of the building in a standing position, without restraint or finger bowls. So board is not the principal item of expense, though of course I do not wish to put up at a place where I will be a disgrace to the paper.

I wish that you would, when you send my check, write me frankly whether you think I had better remain here during the entire session or not. I like the place first rate, but my duties keep me up nights till a late hour, and I cannot sleep during the day, because my room mates annoy me by doing their washing and ironing over an oil stove.

I know by what several friends have said to me that congress would like to have me stay here all winter, but I want to do what is best for the paper.

I saw Mr. Cleveland briefly last evening at his home, but he was surrounded by a crowd of fawning sycophants, so I did not get a chance to speak to him as I would like to, and don't know as he would have advanced the amount to me anyway. He is very firm and stubborn, I judged, and would yield very little indeed, especially to

Yours truly, BILL NYE.

Exhibit A.

The following bill looks large in the aggregate, but when you come to examine each item by itself there is really nothing startling about it, and when you remember that I have been here now four days, and that this is the first bill I have sent in to the office during that time, I know you will not consider it out of the way, especially as you are interested in seeing me make a good paper of The World, no matter what the expense is.

"WE LUNCH PLAINLY."

We are having good open winter weather, and stock is looking well so far.

I fear you will regard the item for embalming as exorbitant, and it is so, but I was compelled to pay that price, as the man had to be shipped a long distance, and I did not want to shock his friends too much when he met them at the depot.

|---|---|
| To rent of dress suit for the purpose of seeing life in Washington in the interest of the paper | $4.50 |
| To charges for dispersing turtle soup from lap of same | 1.00 |
| To getting fur collar put on overcoat, in interest of paper | 9.00 |
| To amount loaned a gentleman who had lived in Washington a long time and could make me a social pet (I will return same to you in case he pays it before I come back) | 5.00 |
| To lodgings two nights at 25 cents | 50 |
| Six meals at 15 cents | 90 |
| Pen and ink | 20 |
| Postage on this letter | 08 |
| Bronchial troches, in interest of paper | 20 |
| Car fare | 60 |
| Laundry work done in interest of paper | 30 |
| Carriage hire in getting from humble home of a senator to my own voluptuous lodgings | 2.00 |
| To expenses of embalming a man who came to me and wanted me to use my influence in changing policy of the paper | 180.00 |
| To fine paid for assault and battery in and upon a gentleman who said he wanted my influence, but really was already under other influence, and who stepped on my stomach twice without offering to apologize | 19.00 |
| Paid janitor of jail next morning | 1.00 |
| Paid for breaking window of my cell | 50 |
| Paid damage for writing humorous poetry on wall of cell so that it could not be erased | 2.00 |
| Total | $226.78 |

I will probably remain here until I hear from you favorably. I have met several members of congress for whom I have voted at various times, off and on, but they were cold and haughty in their intercourse with me. I have been invited to sit on the floor of the house until I get some other place to stay, but I hate to ride a free horse to death.

THE TOMB OF JULIET.

A Cold, Matter-of-Fact Description of a Famous Sepulcher.

It is not possible to come to or from Venice without paying a visit to Verona. Any quantity of spinsters from America, of both the antique and the modern type, are traveling over Europe this season on their own hook. Parties of three and four are encountered everywhere, acting in a perfectly independent manner, and ignorance of the language of the country where they may be does not interfere in the least with their comfort. Not one of them who gets to this part of the world will miss Verona and the tomb of Juliet, nor will they permit any one else they meet to pass by it. Now, I never took much stock in Romeo and Juliet. It always struck me that they were two very ridiculous persons, and the very best thing they ever did was to get themselves out of the way. But as I was told so many times it would not do to be so near Verona and not go there, I went and made the pilgrimage to the tomb of Juliet. The tomb is a fraud. It is nothing but a dilapidated old marble sarcophagus kept in a little hut in the far end of the big garden of a Franciscan monastery. The walk from the outside gate is under an over-hanging arbor of vines, from which great bunches of grapes hang in the utmost profusion. These grapes were really quite delicious and afforded the only compensation for the visit. The sarcophagus is empty, and what has become of Juliet's body can not be told. The sentimental individuals who come to look have left their cards for the spirit of Juliet. These cards are cleared out of the sarcophagus, I suppose, several times a year. When I looked into it there were two thousand or three thousand cards lying at the bottom bearing the names of high and low titled persons, from Counts and Countesses down to plain Smith with no prefix. The Capulet mansion is also one of the attractions of Verona. The balcony where Juliet used to stand and listen to the serenades is perched very high up, and Romeo and the other gallants of Verona must have strained their necks to get a sight of her. The churches of Verona are very quaint and very antique, portions of one of them, according to the story of the guide, going as far back as the seventh century. The most interesting sight in all Verona to me was the old Roman amphitheater, comparatively as perfect as when built, and which, constructed entirely of stone, with that Roman cement which dynamite often fails to affect, looks almost indestructible. I do not see why modern builders can not take a lesson from these architects of old.—Baltimore Sun.

THE FINGER-RING.

An Ornament Which Has Tickled the Vanity of Innumerable Ages.

Of all the ornaments with which vanity, superstition and affection have decorated the human form, few have more curious bits of history than the finger-ring. From the earliest times the ring has been a favorite ornament, and the reasons for this general preference shown for it over other articles of jewelry are numerous and cogent. Ornaments whose place is on some portion of the apparel, or in the hair, must be laid aside with the clothing or head-dress; are thus easily lost and often not at once missed. Pins, brooches, buckles, clasps, buttons, all sooner or later become defective in some part, and are liable to escape from an owner unconscious of the defect in the mechanism. The links of a necklace in time become worn, and the article is taken off to be mended; the spring or other fastening of a bracelet is easily broken, and the bracelet vanishes. With regard to ornaments fastened to parts of the savage body, mutilation is necessary, the ear must be bored, the nose be pierced, the cheeks or lips be slit, and, even after these surgical operations are completed, the articles used for adornment are generally inconvenient, and sometimes, by their weight or construction, are extremly painful.

In striking contrast with decorations worn on the clothing, in the hair, around the neck and arms, or pendent from the ears, lips and nose, is the finger-ring, the model of convenience. It is seldom lost, for it need not be taken off; requires no preparatory mutilation of the body, is not painful, is always in view, a perpetual reminder either of the giver or of the purpose for which it is worn.

The popularity of the ring must, therefore, be in a large measure due to its convenience, and that this good quality was early learned may be inferred from the Hebrew tradition, which attributes the invention of this ornament to Tubal-Cain the "instructor of every artificer in brass and iron."—Popular Science Monthly.

The March of Progress.

It is now possible to construct a complete sewing machine in a minute, or sixty in one hour; a reaper every fifteen minutes or less; three hundred watches in a day, complete in all their appointments. More important than this even is the fact that it is probable to construct a locomotive in a day. From the plans of a draughtsman to the execution of them by the workmen, every wheel, lever, valve and rod may be constructed from the metal to the engine intact. Every rivet may be driven in the boiler, every tube in the tube sheets, and from the smoke-stack to the ash-pan a locomotive may be turned out in a working day, completely equipped, ready to do the work of a hundred horses.—Boston Transcript.

ARTIFICIAL LIGHT.

Historical Facts Gathered by Mr. Richard J. Monks, of Boston.

Mr. Monks said that the subject of artificial light was very large and worthy of a series of lectures, as it ought to be covered. He referred to the worship of the orbs by the ancients. The Incas claimed to be children of the sun. Light of some sort was associated with those who expected some return from their duty. The practice of fires in open spaces was common in ancient times. As civilization advanced lamp laws were passed to prohibit bonfires. For centuries bonfires were common with the Celtic natives in Europe, especially at festival times. Beacon fires were often used as signals. Their use is mentioned in the Greek tragedy of "Agamemnon." In Spain taxes were levied to sustain beacons at the time of the Armada. In the Book of Jeremiah, in the Bible, there is an allusion to the fire signal. There was a mast and tar barrel on Beacon Hill. It was never used and was blown down in 1789.

The use of whale oil originated with the Norwegians. In 1680 the Dutch had 260 vessels, employing 14,000 men, in the business. In New England the whales were first caught from small boats. The Indians engaged with avidity in the hunt for whales. In 1858 there were 600 vessels of 200,000 tons burden engaged in the American whale fishery. The argand lamp was first used in 1800. The decline in whale fishery was due to the discovery of oil in Pennsylvania.

Candles were spoken of first in a remote period. Their use really began in the early history of Christianity. As late as the sixteenth century their use was limited. In spite of modern methods the candle is used for certain purposes, and the soft light can not fail to please the eye. The honor and merit of the first application of coal gas seems to belong to William Murdock, of Redworth, Cornwall. In 1802 he lighted an extensive manufacturing establishment. France also claimed the honor of its first demonstration, but not satisfactorily. January 28, 1807, saw a number of London streets lighted by gas. The amount of $20,000 was raised, and the King petitioned for the incorporation of a company. Two companies supply London at 70 cents per 1,000 cubic feet, and their capital is $60,000,000. Coal gas was first used in Baltimore in 1816, and for some time its progress was slow and unsatisfactory. Now there are over 1,000 works in the United States, furnishing employment to over 25,000 men, a portion being for the manufacture of water gas.

In 1798 a Frenchman discovered the process by which water gas was made. In 1875 Prof. Lowe established the first works in the United States. The business has increased enormously here, but not always, because hard coal and naphtha are so expensive. Natural gas has been known in Asia and China for a long time. History tells us of a well in France in the time of Julius Cæsar. The first in the United States was in Charleston. The Taylor House in Fredonia, N. Y., was illuminated in 1824 in honor of Lafayette. A few years ago a gas well was discovered in Ocean Spray, near this city. The nature and efficiency of natural gas is but partly understood.

Petroleum was known to mankind from the dawn of history. It was spoken of in Sweden in 1750. In Western Pennsylvania it was found on the ground, and used as a medicine many years before wells were bored. In 1858 a well 72 feet deep, yielded more than 1,000 barrels a day. Then a reckless spirit of speculation arose. It enriched a few, while it ruined thousands. The standard drill is five and one-half inches, the flow being as great from a small as from a large hole. In 1880 the products amounted to 25,000,000 barrels, and the stock on hand June 1, 1880, was valued $11,000,000. Russia has valuable deposits at Baku, long known, but just put to commercial use. The value of exports thence in 1883 was $15,000,000. In Russia they are ahead of America, in being able to use the residuum of petroleum. So abundant is the oil in Baku that work can be carried on by its flame in the night, and the oozing of the oil from the ground prevents dust.

In concluding, Mr. Monks said that he had heard a great deal said about the size of the statue of Liberty on Bedloe's Island as being the highest statue ever known in modern or ancient times. To test this he had made a scale of the lighthouse Pharos, which had stood in the harbor of Alexandria, and was regarded as one of the seven wonders of the world, making his computations from the account in Josephus and judging by the distance it could be seen at sea. Placing the model of Pharos against a model of the statue of Liberty, the former was seen to be much the higher of the two.—Boston Herald.

—An iron column, 23 feet long and weighing over 6,000 pounds, part of a new lighthouse being built, was recently landed at Bishop Rock, England, and a storm coming up, was left lashed by a half-inch chain at each end to strong eyebolts. Three days afterward the workmen returned and found that the column had been tossed up by the waves 20 feet to the top of the rock where it was swaying about like a piece of timber. Two days afterward, when they were able to land, the workmen found that a blacksmith's anvil weighing 150 pounds, which they had left in a hole 3½ feet deep and only 2½ feet in diameter, had also been washed by the waves completely out of the hole.

WATCH-CASE SOUVENIRS.

A Jeweler's Mistake Results in Serious Domestic Trouble.

In four out of every five watches brought us to be regulated, repaired or cleaned we find some token. Sometimes it is a bit of ribbon or a lock of hair or a rose petel. But oftener it's a four-leaf clover. The four-leaf clover is a love token always. It is by the maiden fair given to her lover, who tenderly stows it away in the back of his watch-case and forgets all about it. When his watch goes wrong he takes it to a jeweler and doesn't think of the relic it contains. It is difficult always to keep these things straight, and once in a while we mix them up.

One fellow came in a short time ago and registered a kick. He took out of his watch a tiny bit of blond hair, tied with a piece of pink ribbon, and told me in good round terms that it had got him into trouble. "I brought my watch here a couple of weeks ago to be regulated, and forgot to take out a four-leaf clover I had in the back of it. I didn't think any thing more about it until last night, when my girl looked in the back case to see if the clover was still there. When she found this lock of blond hair she fixed me with a cold, glittering glance and offered me back my ring. I put in the next hour trying to explain that I didn't know any thing about the infernal blond hair, and I didn't meet with flattering success. Now, if you don't find up that clover I'll make more trouble in your old store than a deputy sheriff. And you've got to give me a written statement that you put this blond hair in my watch, or I'll prosecute you for malicious mischief. You hear me?"

Well, I foresaw trouble in the air, but took the yellow hair and pink ribbon and laid it away, and in a day or two a middle-aged man came in with wrath all over his face. "What in thunder do you mean by disrupting a man's family peace?" he began as he pulled out his watch and took a four-leaf clover out of the back case. "Do you want to break up a loving household and get me into the divorce court? I left my watch here with a lock of my wife's hair in it, and last night she found this measly four-leaf clover in place of it. I've carried that bit of hair ever since we were engaged, and if I don't get it back you had better move to some other town. What d'ye mean, any way? I never picked a four-leaf clover in my life, nor did my wife, either. I wouldn't go through the row I had last night again for your whole store. Now, you hustle and get me back my own keepsake."

I produced it and explained how it occurred, and his brow cleared. "Now I think of it," he said, as he started to go, "just you write me a letter and tell how this happened, and sign it and seal it for all you're worth. Women never believe a man unless he lies to 'em, and I want something to save me further trouble." I did so, and he departed with his mind at rest.

The other young man came in in a day or two and said he desired to make his regular Thursday evening call, and wanted his four-leaf clover and the accompanying affidavit. He got them both.—Jewelers' Weekly.

ATTACKED BY MONKEYS.

A Company of Men Chased by a Pack of Enraged Apes.

It must have been a comical sight, a company of men chased by a pack of monkeys, but this is the story as told by Captain Lawson in his "Wanderings in New Guinea." According to his account the monkeys were the aggressors, but one would like to hear their side of the question before passing judgment.

"Whilst marching under some walnut-trees, we were maliciously attacked by a large troop of monkeys, who pelted us with the wallah-nuts, and uttered wild screams of delight when they observed that their sudden assault had been successful. A regular volley of the hard missiles fell about our heads and shoulders with such force that, being unexpected, we were smitten with dismay, and scrambled out of the way in a very undignified manner. Upon recovering myself I laughed heartily at the ridiculous figure we had cut, on which one old fellow, who seemed to be the leader of the troop, ran out on a branch that hung over my head, and deliberately spat at me with all the gravity of a human being, a trick that I had never knew a monkey to perform.

"Stepping back a few paces to get a better aim at him I raised my rifle and fired. He appeared to be killed instantly, but sat immovable for several seconds before his body lost its balance and fell. The hubbub that then set in amongst his companions was fearful. They howled at the top of their voices, and seemed to become half mad with rage. They began again to pelt us with the nuts, and though we shot several of their number, they refused to desist, but followed us on our march, leaping from tree to tree with great agility.

"At last we were glad to break into a run in order to escape their persecutions, but this move was unsuccessful, for the monkeys were quite as nimble as we were. So we were compeled to submit to the nuisance for fully three hours, during which time I received so many blows upon head, back and shoulders that I became quite sore, and my light helmet was battered into a highly disreputable shape. At length, much to our gratification, our foes tired themselves out, and gave up the pursuit; but while we remained in sight, they continued to shake their fists with many grimaces most expressive of defiance and a desire for revenge."—Youth's Companion.

THE PORTLAND VASE.

History of a Piece of Art More Famous Than the Peachblow.

In a certain way every body knows about the Portland vase, and yet the other day I stumbled on an interesting fact concerning it, little known or rather forgotten in England, except among collectors and connoisseurs in art. At its sale the little peachblow vase that Mary Jane Morgan was forced to leave behind her did not create half nor quarter of the sensation in America as did that of the Portland vase in Europe. Now you can find the latter in the British Museum. It is kept in a transparent case in a small ante-room devoted to an unequaled collection of cameos, intaglios and the miracles of Roman Etruscan and Grecian work in gold. The atmosphere is a fit one for this gem in glass, found, in a marble tomb, near Rome, four hundred years ago, and for nearly three centuries treasured in the famous palace of Barberini.

The vase stands only ten inches high. Its shape is the perfection of symmetry—broad at the center and diminishing gradually at the base, but to a more marked degree at the neck, and finally expanding there with a flower-like curve, the curve repeated again in the two handles. The substance is glass of a rich but intensely deep blue, throwing into absolute relief classical and exquisite figures in opaque white glass. A microscope fails to detect a flaw in the cutting of these groups, supposed to represent the meeting of Thetis and Peleius on Mount Thelion in the presence of Poissidon and Eros. On the bottom of the vase is its most remarkable piece of cutting, a bust of Atys.

The English chapter in the history of the vase began in 1770, when Mr. Byser, the antiquarian, succeeded in purchasing it. He in turn sold it to Sir William Hamilton, who, unfortunate in china as in matrimony, gave it to the Duke of Portland for 1,800 guineas, or about $9,000. In the course of time a sale of the Portland property, including the precious ornament, was held. The Duchess of Portland, a proud and imperious woman, was present for the purpose of buying in the vase. To her horror and disgust she found a competitor for its purchase in the little, lame, pock-marked china manufacturer, Josiah Wedgwood. To the Duchess this was intolerable, and she began the bidding in a spirited manner, determined to speedily put down the son of a common Staffordshire potter.

Wedgwood, however, was as determined as the Duchess to become the owner of the vase, and had a higher motive than family pride at the bottom of his desire. The bids rapidly ran up, and a chill of fear seized the Duchess as they mounted, for her purse had its limits, and at last, in anger and despair, she made her final offer, was outbid, and rushed from the room. In a few moments a message was brought to Mr. Wedgwood to the effect that her Grace wished to speak with him in private. What passed at the interview no one ever knew with exactness, but it is presumed that a woman in tears effected what a Duchess in anger could not—and won from the gentle instincts of the workman's son what the great and ambitious art manufacturer never would have conceded. At any rate, the Duchess kept the vase, and Josiah Wedgwood reserved the sole right for himself and heirs to reproduce fifty copies of it every one hundred years.

In 1810 the Duke of Portland, who justly felt that this famous work of art should no longer be kept for the satisfaction of the few, placed it in the British Museum, where it at once brought a visit from the art-lovers of the world. Until 1845 it remained as perfect as when plucked from the grave four centuries before, but at this time a drunken mechanic, who in some way got into the sacred ante-room, smashed it with a stone into a thousand pieces.

The bits were afterward collected, and with infinite skill cemented by an expert in such a way that the seams can scarcely be observed, while the shape is preserved.—London Letter.

Better Than a Dog.

"Aren't you afraid of tramps, living all alone as you are?" asked one Western woman of another.

"Not in the least. I am fully protected."

Do you keep a dog?"

"No, they might poison a dog. I keep a large woodpile in the yard where it can be easily seen from the road. They never come any farther than the front gate."—Merchant Traveler.

SEVEN GREAT BOOKS.

History of the Most Famous Sacred Writings Now in Existence.

The seven Bibles of the world are the Koran of the Mohammedans, the Eddas of the Scandinavians, the Try Pitikes of the Buddhists, the Five Kings of the Chinese, the three Vedas of the Hindoos, the Zendavesta, and the Scriptures of the Christians. The Koran is the most recent of these seven Bibles, and not older than the seventh century of our era. It is a compound of quotations from the Old and New Testaments, the Talmud, and the Gospel of St. Barnabas. The Eddas of the Scandinavians were first published in the fourteenth century. The Pitikes of the Buddhists contain sublime morals and pure aspirations, but their author lived and died in the sixth century before Christ. There is nothing of excellence in these sacred books not found in the Bible. The sacred writings of the Chinese are called the Five Kings, king meaning web of cloth, or the warp that keeps the threads in their place. They contain the best sayings of the best sages on the ethico-political duties of life. These sayings can not be traced to a period higher than the eleventh century B. C. The three Vedas are the most ancient books of the Hindoos, and it is the opinion of Max Muller, Wilson, Johnson and Whitney that they are not older than eleven centuries B. C. The Zendavesta of the Persians is the grandest of all the sacred books next to our Bible. Zoroaster, whose sayings it contains, was born in the twelfth century B. C. Moses lived and wrote his Pentateuch fifteen centuries B. C., and therefore has a clear margin of three hundred years older than the most ancient of the other sacred writings.—Interior.

Birds Enjoying Exercise.

That birds enjoy the exercise of their powers there can be no manner of doubt. But, as a fact, bird life presents innumerable instances of the maintenance of the powers of flight in species to whose existence it is by no means essential. The skylark does not soar from mercenary motive; pigeons, domesticated for generations, fly about all day long, though they need to seek neither food nor shelter. It is not necessary to watch birds on the wing for very long to convince one's self the act of flight is one of pure enjoyment; that it is cultivated and adorned with the refinements which characterize an "accomplishment." Such is the evolution of the tumbler pigeon, such the more refined and masterly hovering of some birds who possess the power of so balancing themselves on a slanting breeze as to remain motionless with respect to the earth, without apparently moving a wing or a feather, floating all the time, still and calm.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

The Sultan's Morning Prayer.

The Sultan stands erect with his face to the east and his feet on his praying carpet, and placing the thumbs of each hand under each ear, he spreads his hands like wings, lifting his ears upward as if to catch any sound from Heaven, and with his hands in this position must turn first to the right and spit, then to the left, and then dropping his hands to his side hold them rigid while he bends his knee and then his whole body forward from his knees until his forehead touches the floor three times. He repeats his prayer in this position and gets upon his feet again without touching his hands to the floor and again makes wings of his ears and again spits right and left, and his prayer is over. Every Turk believes he has two attendant spirits, one good and one evil, and as he is not sure which side the emissary of Shiatan has pre-empted, he spits at both to make sure.—Olive Harper.

The Story of Devil's Lake.

This pretty lake deserved a better name, but the Indians have irrevocably consecrated most of it to the devil, in name, at least, writes a correspondent from Dakota. There is a Devil's Heart, a pretty wooded hill, a mountain, and high for this region at three hundred feet. Devil's Tooth is a rocky curiosity for a stoneless country, and Devil's Backbone is the name of a seam in one of the lakeside hills. The very water of the lake, clear and wave-capped, is called the Devil's Broth. Indians still speak of its "treacherous waters," for legend has it that years ago, before the white man came, two warlike tribes met in canoes in mid-lake, and the spirit of the waters swallowed them up to a man. Ever since that day the red man has shunned the lake, and to this day none of the older Sioux will cross it.—Hartford Courant.

Monday, The 27th Day Of February, 1888,

Between the hours of 9 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m., to wit, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., commence to sell the foregoing described real property at public auction in front of the Court House, in the town of Independence, County of Inyo, State of California,

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18 ....1888

See the notice of miners wanted at Panamint.

Mr. Robert Ford, of Bishop Creek, was in town last Monday.

Mr. J. B. Stewart, of Big Pine, was in town during the week.

Frank Fitzgerald came up from Lookout to Lone Pine last Tusday.

Martin Mee has sold to J. C. Eddy several mining claims at Darwin.

Mrs. Fannie Elliot, of Big Pine, was at Independence during the week.

Mr. Jacob Keller, of Bishop Creek, was in town a few days this week.

Under-Sheriff Thurston was at Panamint on official business during the week.

Reub. Spear has bought the blacksmith shop formerly owned by A. C. Harvey, at Lone Pine.

Wednesday evening rain set in and continued through the night. Thursday it rained all day.

The new mill at Panamint is now running. Everything goes along smoothly and the prospect is good.

The State apportionment in aid of the schools of Inyo county for the present year amounts to $3,577 70.

The Odd Fellows at Independence propose building a new hall. Designs for the building are under consideration.

Last Sunday, February 12th was the anniniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. It was celebrated in many places.

A good many young peach trees of choice varieties have been shipped here from Kern county and set out during the past ten days.

Rev. T. E. Sisson went North last Tuesday. He goes to Reno and Carson on business connected with the Academy at Bishop Creek.

It is stated on what appears to be good authority that Blaine will positively decline to be a candidate for the nomination for the Presidency.

Thursday night there was a good deal of lightning and thunder, accompanied by heavy rain. The ground is now well soaked and in fine condition for work.

The Crocker Brothers are going ahead with improvements on their place at Big Pine. Thep have bought an additional lot of work horses at Bishop Creek and put them to work.

Hay will not be so high priced during the coming spring as was expected. There is plenty for all the wants of the neighborhood and it is now certain that the new crop will be ready early.

The ladies of Big Pine will give a most cordial welcome to ladies from this end of the valley at their party on the 29th. Ladies are expected to invite their gentlemen friends to accompany them.

We must ask the indulgence of our readers for the lack of news space this week. Five new ordinances are published in this issue which, with the delinquent tax list, leaves little room for news matter.

Inyo county for the last financial year paid into the State Treasury for State tax the sum of $8,302 66. Our neighbor county, Mono, paid $5,187 53. It is but a few years since Mono county was far richer than Inyo.

Messrs. Gus. Walker and Horace Bellows, of Olancha; made a trip up the valley during the week. They were accompanied by Mr. Simon Bellows, of Iowa, who is on a visit with his brother, Mr. Horace Bellows.

On the night of February 2, 1888, there was stolen from the ranch of C. Averill, near Tulare, one dark iron-gray mare, seven years old, weight about 1300 pounds; a large lump on the front of left hind leg; well broke; Norman stock. Twenty dollars reward will be paid for recovery of mare and arrest of the thief.

The Firemen of Lone Pine were sponsors for a very pleasant social party at that place last Tuesday (St. Valentine's) eve. Though the attendance was not large, the affair passed off very pleasantly. Hon. W. R. Johnson, T. R., officiated as St. Valentine's Postmaster and distributed the tender missives—and some not so tender.

Mr. Levy Cartier arrived at Independence last Monday from Montana. He intends leaving here next Monday for Los Angeles, and thence back to his home in Montana. Miss Louise Cartier, who has been here for some time on a visit with her uncles, H. P. and Philip Cartier, will accompany her uncle, Mr. Levi Cartier on his return home.

A few days ago Jacob Keller came down from Bishop Creek. In looking over the township maps at the Land Office he was so fortunate as to find an unlocated quarter section at Camp Independence, two and a half miles from town. He at once made a homestead entry upon the land and will begin at once to build and improve. It is a fine piece of land, is ready for the plow at once and will make a good farm. Mr. Keller is in luck; no one thought there was any unlocated land in that neighborhood.

Heredity.

Three or four years ago Mr. J. B. Stewart, of Big Pine, bought a bull that was a twin. The first heifer from the bull bore twins and recently one of these twins has given birth to twins. All the progeny of the bull are thrifty, good animals.

New Saw Mill.

A new saw mill is being built in Turner's Canyon, west from Big Pine. Steam power will be used. Mr. Creaser, one of the Supervisors of Mono county, is said to be the principal party interested. There is a good body of timber in the locality.

Artesian Well Boring.

The scheme of raising money by subscription for boring an experimental artesian well appears to be a failure. Not a word has been heard about the matter for some time past. And yet there would be many land locators who would be willing to contribute, and among these are non-resident locators as well as citizens of the valley. It has been suggested by a very practical man that the best way to test the matter would be to organize a company; buy the necessary machinery; hire competent men to run it, and bore wells by contract for all who may want them. If one good flowing well was struck at any point in the valley there would be plenty of demand for more.

SUPERVISORS' PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, February 10, 1888.

On the above named day the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county, met at 10 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, a full Board being present and Chairman Harger presiding.

Minutes of preceding day read and approved.

The Board, by unanimous vote, revoked the appointment of Thomas McLeod as Overseer of Road District No. 2 and declared the office vacant.

The Board appointed William H. Powers to the office of Road Overseer of Road District No. 2.

By unanimous vote the Board passed ordinances known as Ordinance No. 22, Ordinance No. 23, Ordinance No. 24, Ordinance No. 25 and Ordinance No. 26.

Ordered: That said ordinances be published in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper published in said Inyo county, for two weeks.

Claim of L. Baxter considered and allowed in the sum of $12.

The Sheriff was instructed to procure a lamp for the Courthouse hall.

The Board authorized S. D. Thurston to procure two one inch hydrants, one three inch fire plug, 100 feet of two inch rubber hose, one nozzle and water to be placed and used on the Courthouse grounds.

The Auditor was instructed to draw his warrant in favor of S. D. Thurston for the above named articles when the same shall be received and accepted.

Four bids for building fence around the Courthouse grounds were opened, examined and rejected.

The Board empowered Supervisor Robinson to procure material for a fence around the Courthouse grounds and have the same constructed.

The Auditor was instructed to draw his warrant on order of Supervisor Robinson in payment of materials used in construction of said fence, and also forlabor in constructing said fence.

The petition of Conklin Bros. asking the Board to refund $8 21 on account of Independence School District tax was allowed. The amount allowed had been assessed on cattle that were not within the District.

The following claims were allowed:

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| J. D. Harger, per diem and mileage | | | | $44 10 |
| J. R. Eldred | " | " | " | 43 80 |
| E. Robinson | " | " | " | 24 30 |
| T. Boland | " | " | " | 33 60 |
| J. C. Eddy | " | " | " | 40 80 |

The Board adjourned.

J. D. HARGER, Chairman.

Attest: P. H. MACK, Clerk.

The Supervisors would gladly have granted the petition for a bridge at Big Pine, but there is not money enough at their disposal for that purpose. The law is very strict that confines Supervisors that the expense shall not exceed the revenue. After the close of the present fiscal year in June there may be money enough available and then the Board will grant the petition. Everybody recognizes the need for the bridge.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.

JOHN C. EVANS, SHORTLAKE, Mo., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take as much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house. If they had to take the feathers from under their wife and babies to pay for it." JOHN R. DODGE, JR., jeweler, NORMAL, Ill., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. 1st. It is the best machine ever invented by man. 2d. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. 3d. If you run short, you can not buy ours for gold." ## OUR CONFESSION OF FAITH.

By Which It is Hoped Any Injustice May be Corrected.

To Our Readers:

In common with many publishers and editors, we have been accustomed to look upon certain statements which we have seen in our columns as merely adroit advertising.

Consequently we feel justified in taking the liberty of printing a few points from a private letter recently received from one of our largest patrons, as a sort of confession of faith to our readers. We quote:

"We have convinced ourselves that by telling what we know to be true, we have produced at last a permanent conviction in the public mind. Nine years ago we stated what the national disease of this country was, and that it was rapidly increasing. Five years ago we stated that a marked check had been given it.

"The statistics of one of the largest life insurance companies of this country shows that in 1883 and 1884, the mortality from kidney disorders did not increase over the previous years: other companies stated the same thing. It is not presumptuous for us to claim credit for checking these ravages.

Seven years ago we stated that the condition of the kidneys was the key to the condition of health; within the past five years all careful life insurance companies have conceded the truth of this statement, for, whereas, ten years ago, chemical analysis to determine the condition of the kidneys was not required, to-day millions of dollars in risks are refused, because chemical examination discovers unsuspected diseases of the kidneys.

"Nine years ago we stated that the ravages of Bright's Disease were insignificant compared with other unsuspected disorders of the kidneys of many misleading names; that ninety-three per cent. of human ailments are attributable to deranged kidneys, which fills the blood with uric acid, or kidney poison, which causes these many fatal diseases.

"The uric acid, or kidney poison, is the real cause of the majority of cases of paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, convulsions, pneumonia, consumption, and insanity; over half the victims of consumption are first the victims of diseased kidneys.

"When the recent death of an honored ex-official of the United States was announced, his physician said that although he was suffering from Bright's Disease, that was not the cause of death. He was not frank enough to admit that the apoplexy which overtook him in his bed, was the fatal effect of the kidney poison in the blood, which had eaten away the substance of the arteries and brain; nor was Logan's physician honest enough to state that his fatal rheumatism was caused by kidney acid in the blood.

"If the doctors would state in official reports the original cause of death, the people of this country would be alarmed, yea, nearly panic stricken, at the fearful mortality from kidney disorders."

The writers of the above letter give these facts to the public simply to justify the claims that they have made, that "if the kidneys and liver are kept in a healthy condition by the use of Warner's safe cure, which hundreds of thousands have proved to be a specific, when all others failed, and that has received the endorsement of the highest medical talent in Europe, Australia, and America, many a life would be prolonged and the happiness of the people preserved. It is successful with so many different cases because it, and it alone, can remove the uric acid from the blood through the kidneys."

Our readers are familiar with the preparation named.

Commendation thereof has often appeared in our columns.

We believe it to be one of the best, if not the best ever manufactured. We know the proprietors are men of character and influence.

We are certain they have awakened a wide spread interest in the public mind concerning the importance of the kidneys. We believe with them that they are the key to health, and that for their restoration from disease and maintenance in health, there is nothing equal to this great remedy.

The proprietors say they "do not glory in this universal prevalence of disease, but having started out with the purpose of spreading the merits of Warner's safe cure before the world, because it cured our senior proprietor, who was given up by doctors as incurable, we feel it our duty to state the facts and leave the public to its own inferences. We point to our claims, and to their public and universal verification with pride, and if the public does not believe what we say, we tell them to ask their friends and neighbors what they think about our preparations."

As stated above, we most cordially commend the perusal of this correspondence by our readers, believing that in so doing, we are fulfilling a simple public obligation.

—The English army consists nominally of 211,474 officers and men, but it is said that only one army corps can actually be got in the field, and that only by frantic makeshifts. Of the 71,810 officers and men stationed in England it is alleged that 15,000 are boys under nineteen and that 10,000 more are under twenty.

—The native merchants of China are said to be inveterate swindlers. A foreign dealer at Tientsin recently contracted for fifteen hundred bales of camels' wool, guaranteed free of dirt and sand. When the first instalment had passed through the cleaning machine 35 per cent. of its gross weight was found to be sand and gravel, and besides that the wool had been wet to make the dirt stick in, and also make it heavier.

—In China all the roads except the imperial highways are tracks over private land. The owner does all he can to restrict them. When the soil washes down into the road—the road is always deeper than the land—the owner digs out the road to get back his soil with interest. This makes the roads in the rainy season successions of deep puddles, and over all Northern China traffic is suspended for four or five months every year on occount of the impassability of the roads.

IN THE BETHESDA MISSION.

Baby Boys and Girls in Chicago's "Day Nursery"—Little Ones at Dinner.

There is one bright spot in the very heart of the "levee" district. It is the Bethesda Day Nursery. It is in a wretched neighborhood—a district where dissipation and sin and sorrow and poverty abound. The population is a horrid mixture, including the worst colored element and the most vile characters of the levee white population. The streets are frequented by bad characters by day, and are the scene of brawls and fights by night. Dives and dens and gambling resorts, and doubtful lodging places, make the place one to be avoided by all respectable people. It is in the very heart of this place that the Women's Christian Temperance union is carrying on its most effective local mission work.

But its most flourishing department is the Bethesda day nursery. The work of this branch is presided over by Mrs. William Sevant, who seems to be peculiarly adapted for charitable work. The nursery was opened in November, 1886, and from that date it has been the home of the babe from the little thing 2 weeks old to the child of 7. There the little ones live and chatter and coo and crow, and cry and laugh and eat and drink during the day time, while their widowed or deserted mothers are out scrubbing or washing, striving to earn a livelihood for her family. Mrs. Sevant has been very successful in her work, but, of course, does not receive the liberal donations in aid of the little ones that she desires. She has secured as matron Mrs. M. B. Smith, who has the immediate care of the nursery. It is located on the second and third floors of the building, immediately above the mission chapel, and is fitted up with a view to the comfort of the babies. Mothers who are striving to earn an honest living and who are obliged to work out by the day, may carry their little ones to the nursery in the morning and call for them again at night when they return from the hard day's toil to their miserable homes. They are asked to pay each day ten cents, if they can; five cents if they cannot afford ten; two cents if they can spare it, and nothing if they have naught to give.

The reporter was taken into the nursery the other afternoon, in the midst of the twenty-three babies, and the sight that met his astonished gaze cannot well be described. It may be said at the outset that the nursery clothes and feeds these little ones, as well as furnishes them a day home. Hence they were all clean and neatly clad. The youngest was three weeks old. It was tugging away at a well filled bottle for dear life, and had an extensive growth of black hair. Its eyes were jet black and piercing, and there was a smile upon its fat little face.

In the "crib room" babies were sleeping and cooing and crying and laughing and rolling upon the floor. It was a queer sight. To see the babies in the dining room is worth the walk to the nursery. There are three long, narrow tables. One is about twelve inches high from the floor, and the little chairs that surround it give the scene an old fashioned appearance. The other two are a little higher, but the "high chair" business has been abolished. Twenty babies at dinner! Well, it is worth seeing. It takes four nurses to pick up spoons. And the baby food. It is delicious, which is evidenced by the keen appetites of the babies. They are a friendly lot at the table, and are allowed considerable latitude. Johnny dips his spoon, for instance, into Eddie's dish. As an appreciation of this Eddie lands a left hand full of bread and milk just under Johnny's left eye. Spoons are thrown aside and a hair pull tug of war sets in, which is lovingly terminated by the gentle hands of the nurse. Such is happy baby life at the Bethesda nursery. —Chicago Herald.

Stealing from Actors.

Actors often suffer from thieves while on the road. It is not their valuables—diamonds, cash and the like movables—which disappear as often as their professional appurtenances, which have less monetary value, but whose loss often causes distressing inconvenience. Eugene O'Rourke sings a pretty and pleasing song, "Papa, Sweet Mamma and Me." One day while the company was staying in one of the interior Michigan towns the entire orchestra score disappeared, having been appropriated by a local leader whose stock of fresh music had run low and who wanted to get a new number for his repertory cheaply. As there was not a second copy of the orchestra score and the song could not be sung without an accompaniment, "Papa, Sweet Mamma and Me" had to retire until the work of orchestration could again be done.

"I can tell of stranger things than that," said an old time actor. "You have no idea of the rapacity of the thieves who rob traveling professionals, nor of their persistency. I knew a leader who had a violin which he prized very highly and watched zealously—even slept with it under his pillow. Well, sir, a fellow up in Muskegon, I think it was, took a notion to have that violin. He followed the company from town to town, and after a week's cat at a rat hole watching, he got an opportunity and sneaked it. Why, they steal our cuffs, collar buttons, old shoes if they can't find mates, make up boxes, stage clothes—anything they can lay hands on."—Detroit Free Press.

Color in Dress in New York.

When we come to the question of color in dress, as it appears relatively to the decorative tendencies of the New York street, we must look for its mainspring, in some degree, to American social conditions. American women, as a rule, make more display of magnificence in the street than the women of any other nation. To them the street means a show, a parade, in which they play an important part. In adopting the modern English æsthetic idea of color in dress, American women have applied it extensively to street costumes. The use of brilliant reds in street gowns and hats having spread throughout Europe is now nationalized on American soil, and adds cheerfulness to life and landscape. The approaching change in the costumes of men is likely to result in a freer use of color. The English movement against the monotony of male attire is finding followers in this country, and already many men are beginning to appear in public in colors that were until recently tabooed.—The Art Review.

Clock Bird of Africa.

A missionary in Africa was astonished while walking in a wood to hear a clock strike, though no human habitation was within miles of the place. He discovered that the noise proceeded from a bird known as the clock bird and called by the Spanish the campanero. The bird gives a note every few minutes which is identical with the sound of a striking clock.—Chicago Times.

TOO LATE.

What silence we keep, year after year
With those who are most near to us and dear,
We live beside each other day by day
And speak of myriad things and seldom say
The full, sweet word that lies just in our reach
Beneath the commonplace of common speech.

Then out of sight and out of reach they go—
These close, familiar friends who loved us;
And, sitting in the shadow they have left,
Alone with loneliness and sore bereft,
We think with vain regret of some fond word
That once we might have said and they have heard

For weak and poor the love that we express
Now seems beside the vast, sweet unexpressed,
And slight the deeds we did to those undone,
And small the service spent to treasures won,
And undeserved the praise for word and deed
That should have overflowed the simple need.

This is the cruel cross of life, to be Full visioned only when the ministry
Of death has been fulfilled, and in the place
Of some dear presence is but empty space.
What recollected service e'er can then Give consolation for the might have been?
—Nora Perry in New York Independent.

SKILLFUL FOUR LEGGED MINERS.

Cunning Gophers and How They Bore Tunnels—Where They Carry Food.

In appearance, the gopher, or pouched rat, as it is sometimes called, resembles a short tailed and short legged rat, with a large head and protruding teeth. Their cheeks attract attention, having the appearance of being pushed out or stuffed with something, but this is owing to the fact that our miner has two very strange receptacles, one on each side, separate and distinct from the mouth, little carpet bags we might call them, each lined with fur, and large enough to enable me to thrust in my thumb to the first joint. Pouches, they are sometimes and often called, and as to their use, there seems to be a diversity of opinion.

The front claws of this miner are extremely large and powerful and enable it to construct tunnels with remarkable rapidity. When once beneath the surface they construct their mines in every direction, with no great regularity, but evidently with the idea of forming a labyrinth that will carry off floods. That this is successful I have frequently demonstrated by turning a large stream of water into the mine. It would run in without overflowing for a long time, and I have never succeeded in forcing one out by this means.

It would naturally be supposed that such miners would place their nest at some distant or deep lead in the mine, but the reverse is the rule, the warm nest of bits of weed being formed very near the surface, from which different mines lead away, taking any water that might come in. It might be assumed that the bags or pouches were used to carry out the dirt and stones removed, but, curiously enough, they use them for exactly the reverse, and for carrying seeds or food.

As soon as a gopher makes up its mind that its mining operations have been observed, it invariably crawls out, or partly out, of the mine or burrow, and, filling its pouches with sticks and sand, backs quickly in, its tail seemingly guiding it to the hole with unfailing regularity, the animal never turning, but always backing, and moving so rapidly that it seems almost like the curious lizard that runs one way as well as another. The soil and material carried in this way is deposited at the entrance of the mine, and if the animal thinks that danger is imminent it bites off earth at the mouth of the burrow. Having done this for a few moments it disappears and a second later the opening closes, and a close examination shows a quivering of the earth and a repeated pushing up as if some one was patting it from below. In short, the mine has been filled up from below and so skillfully that few would notice it.

But where is the miner? Not off in some deep lead hundreds of feet away, but near at hand, in a tunnel quite at the surface, that has a port hole about as large as a pea. Through this "port hole" the wily miner takes observations, and the tunnel will not be reopened for weeks if it is watched.

The gopher comes out generally at night to feed, and carries seeds in its pouches, but the sand and gravel that is removed from the mine is never taken in this way, being pushed up by the animal's breast and forefeet. They are the pests of the southwest portions of the continent, and the valleys of southern California are tunneled by a maze of their mines.—Golden Days.

Jean Ingelow at Home.

Everything is interesting in the life of a talented woman, but Jean Ingelow still shrinks from notoriety, wishing, as she says herself, "to be known only as a name." She resides in London with her mother in a quiet street where all the houses are gay with window boxes full of flowers, and devotes a great part of her time to charitable work among the London poor. Three times a week she gives what she calls a "copyright dinner" to the sick poor; those just out of the hospital and unable to work. Concerning this work of hers she says: "We have about twelve to dinner three times a week, and hope to continue the plan. It is such a comfort to see the good it does. I find it one of the greatest pleasures of writing that it gives me more command of money for such purposes than falls to the lot of most women. I call this 'a copyright dinner.' We generally have six children as well as the grown up people each time, and it is quite pleasant to see how the good food improves their health. We only have this dinner three times a week, and let each person dine six or nine times as it seems desirable."—New Orleans Picayune.

Perseverance an Important Factor.

The editor of The Industrial Gazette has observed that the man who starts in to do a day's work, and attempts to do as much in one hour as ought to be done in two, will usually find it necessary in a short time to take a rest, and while he is resting will lose valuable time which he evidently feels that he ought to make up, judging from the spasmodic efforts he will make when he starts in to work again. But, at night, the man who works steady, but perseveringly, will be found to have accomplished the most, while usually he will also be found in a much better condition to commence again the next day.

So it is in business. One will seem to hustle around and make a considerable to do over what he is doing, and after wasting his energies in accomplishing what, by taking a little more time, could be done with very little effort, and then, because, as he thinks, he fails to meet the success he imagines he should, becomes discouraged and ready to make a change to something else. This, in a majority of cases, proves a loss, and, in consequence, he does not succeed as the energy he displays would seem to warrant. Another man, while he may not make a great display of his energies at the start, will go to work more systematic, and will have better opportunities to economize, and in many cases to manage better than when he attempts to rush matters. If he will but observe, he will be ready to take advantage of any favorable circumstances that may arise. It always seems that the man who is constantly shifting about is always making a change at the wrong time, when a little perseverance would have brought him through all right.—Scientific American.

On the Way to Brooklyn.

A sunburned old fellow with an oilcloth traveling bag was sitting on a bench in the Fulton ferry house the other day.

Suddenly he arose from his seat, accosted a passing gentleman, and inquired:

"Eh—kin you tell me what time the boat leaves?"

"Why, there's boats leaving every few minutes or so," was the reply.

"Every few minutes er so, hey? W'l what's the reason this boat don't start then?"

"What boat?"

"W'y this 'ere boat."

"Man alive! This ain't the boat; this is the ferry house!"

"Yew—don'—say so!" slowly ejaculated the sunburned old fellow. "The ferry house!" he went on, with a foolish smile. "An' here I've been a-waitin' three hours for the blamed thing to start for Brooklyn!"

And he rubbed his chin reflectively and walked on.—Drake's Travelers' Magazine.

Journalistic Enterprise.

Says The Arizona Howler: "A despatch has just come to us over our special wire from New York, saying that the French people have elected a man named Sadie Carrot as president. It looks as though there must be some mistake in the transmission of his name; but as we pay big money for our special news, we can't afford to throw it away on account of a little mistake in the name. So we shove her in with the single remark that it is better to have a Carrot for a president than a dead beat for a son-in-law. In this way we again score a live beat on the galoot 'The Ripsnorter.' Whoopee! Now is the time to subscribe."—New York Tribune.

America's Big Four.

Prince of Wales—Mamma, allow me to present you to Mr. Blaine of America.

"He wouldn't come."—Omaha World.

Economy Is Wealth.

Little Iky Schaumburg having fallen and raised a lump on his forehead, somebody suggested to his mother that she press a silver dollar on the bruised place, which would cause the swelling to subside.

A Matter of Business.

Young Wife—My dear, you ought not to have purchased such an elegant suit of clothes. It is entirely too costly for your income and you certainly ought to know it.

"Still worse."

"But I had to have them."

"What for?"

The Sad Reality.

When the honeymoon is over and acquaintance molds the lover to a sense of sober fitness and the seamy sided real;
When the glow has left the fever and he turns an unbeliever, how he wonders as he ponders on the frailty of ideal!

Then he sees it is fashion for the willing heat of passion to benumb to temper frigid in possession's heedless sight.
When his ardor terms a question of his powers of digestion, or which of them retiring shall put out the vexing light.

When the Benedict lies thinking, with his peepers slyly blinking at his better half who shivers with an unproductive are,
She discerns through coughs and sneezing, with the mercury at freezing, that affection all depends on who constructs the kitchen fire.

Proposed Compromise.

A small sized Hartford girl had been corrected by a mild punishment, and was asked if she would do as her parents wanted her to in the future.

"Yes," replied the penitent, "but you musn't ask me to do anything I don't want to do."—Hartford Post.

GOT THEIR MONEY.

Mention was made in a recent issue of the Times of the fact that Jim Baker and Sam McArthur had drawn $15,000 in The Louisiana State Lottery. Last Thursday the money was received through the Missoula National Bank and turned over to the lucky holders of the ticket. The boys did not know but that there might be a mistake somewhere, and were naturally restless until the money came and was placed to their credit in the bank. The Louisiana State Lottery has stood the test of years, and is just as solid and reliable as any concern in the country. We believe the drawings are absolutely fair and that the lottery is conducted as honestly and equitably as any other business. We are informed that three or four other minor prizes were secured by Missoula parties at the last drawing. Another tenth of the capital prize of $150,000 was drawn by William Poad of the town of Anaconda, in the adjoining county of Deer Lodge, and was collected through the Omaha National Bank of Omaha, Nebraska.

Messrs. Baker and McArthur have secured a snug little sum, and by carefully investing their stake, they should be able to keep the wolf from the door during the balance of their lives.—Missoula (Mont.) Times, Dec. 7th.

FIVE THOUSAND AND FIVE DOLLARS DRAWN.

David C. Meacon is the lucky man that held one-tenth of ticket No. 69,-368 which drew the Second Capital Prize of $50,000, from the monthly drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery Company, November 8th. Mr. Meacon also held two other tickets, one of which drew $5.00, the other a blank. He also informs us that it was his first venture. This comes as a God-send to Mr. Meacon as he was depending on his daily labor to support his family. His former residence was in Pittsburg. The night before he was to ship his household goods to this place a fire occurred and burned everything, leaving him without anything. He is a worthy and exemplary man and many friends here rejoice at his good luck.—Elwood (Ind.) Free Press, Dec. 9.

An Original Theory.

ADVICE TO CONSUMPTIVES.

On the appearance of the first symptoms, as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night-sweats and cough, prompt measures of relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous disease of the lungs; therefore use the great anti-scrofulous or blood-purifier and strength-restorer, Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Superior to cod liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, and kindred affections, it has no equal. Sold by druggists. READ THE DEATH ROLL

Which the bills of mortality of any large city may be fitly designated, and you will find that renal and vesical maladies, that is to say, those that effect the kidney or bladder, have a remarkable prominence—we had almost said—preponderance. Bright's disease and diabetes in the chronic stage are rarely cured, and gravel, catarrh of the bladder and enuresis slay many. Yet at the outset, when the trouble merely amounts to inactivity of the organs involved, the danger may be nullified by that pleasant renal tonic and diuretic Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which imparts the requisite amount of tone to the organs, without over-exciting them, and the use of which is convenient, and involves no elaborate preparation. Dyspepsia, a usual concomitant of renal complaints, and debility, which they invariably produce, are remedied by it. So also are constipation, malarial, rheumatic and nervous ailments.

The man who is slow to express an opinion might just as well send it by freight.

GET RID OF THAT BAD TASTE.

When you wake up in the morning with a bad taste in your mouth, with your throat and tongue dry and a yellow coating on your teeth and gums, don't imagine it was all caused by what you ate the night before. Of course everybody does that and everybody "swears off" from again eating such food. The trouble is that your liver is clogged, your kidneys are overworked and your bowels are not doing their duty. Take from three to ten of BRANDRETH'S PILLS and note the sudden and wonderful change in your system.

THE DANISH HORN.

A Remarkable Relic Said to Be a Genuine Trumpet of Zion.

In the royal museum of Copenhagen there is, and has been for more than two hundred and seventy-five years, a golden trumpet, known throughout Denmark as the "Danish Horn," with engraved emblems, comprising the symbol of purity, the triple lily. Its weight is one hundred and two ounces and it measures two feet nine inches in length. This horn is said to be a genuine trumpet of Zion. The surrounding circumstances strongly sustain the position, and up to the present time there has not been the slightest scientific doubt as to the genuineness of the relic. The lily, as a symbol of purity, was generally carried in the right hand by the vestal virgins of the temple; it also forms the emblem on the "shekel," the Jewish coin. There are also discernable the much effaced remains of what has the appearance of pomegranates, and traces of an inscription which, as far as it can be made out, is engraved in that kind of Hebrew characters known as the Samarian text. The emblems and inscription may be easily accounted for and accepted for the meaning of the word "Jehovah."

The trumpet was discovered by a farmer's daughter, partly concealed in the ground, in 1630, in the diocese of Rypeny, Jutland. As to how it found its way from Palestine to Denmark can only be conjectured at. It is accepted as a fact that the relic at one time was one of the instruments anciently used in Solomon's temple. Certain ornaments; and especially the beautiful engraving near the opening of the large end of the instrument, forming a turreted border around its edge, are the most convincing proofs for this position. When Titus Vespasianus, the youthful Roman General, subjugated Indaea and destroyed its temple, he took the renowned tables, the seven-branch candlestick, the "Sacred Books" and the trumpets to Rome, where they were, with other trophies of victory, carried in procession through the city in honor of the conqueror. Upon the arch of Titus these things were sculptured and may be seen in Rome in a fair state of preservation to-day. The "Sacred Books" the victor presented to Josephus Flavius, the Jewish historian. Afterward, when Titus became emperor of Rome, the instruments and "tables of schew bread," by decree of the Senate and council of Rome, were placed in the great temple of Jupiter. Between the fourth and sixth centuries Rome was overrun by hordes of northern barbarians. The city was taken, religion for the time dethroned, and temples, regardless of the sanctity, sacred or historical, were sacrilegiously plundered. After their retreat from Rome the Vandals carried off with them the spoils they had seized in the temples.

This trumpet of gold which corresponds in every particular with the trumpets sculptured upon the "Arch of Titus," was doubtless carried to the north with the other plunder and in turn lost by the conquerors of Rome, who had taken it from the conquerors of the Jews.

Another illustration of the old adage, that "History repeats itself."—Earth.

NAPOLEON'S WEALTH.

Absolute Disappearance of One of the Greatest Personal Fortunes.

One of the most remarkable historical incidents of this century was the disappearance of Napoleon I.'s enormous fortune. In 1810 he was far and away the richest individual in the world. He came out of the Italian campaign ending in 1800 with $4,000,000, according to his own account. This he maintained was his private property. Taking the statements he made to his friends and others at St. Helena he must have hidden away when he left France the last time the enormous sum of $40,000,000, or 200,000,000 francs. This would make him very much the wealthiest man in the world, for that sum then was equal in influence to $200,000,000 now. No sovereign of his time could begin to approach him in personal fortune. Marshal Soult, the last of the Imperial Marshals (who died in November, 1851, just about a year before his great antagonist, the duke of Wellington), told a venerable French general officer, who repeated it to the writer, that when the Emperor went to Elba he had 60,000,000 francs covered up in Paris alone.

Of the $12,000,000 hard cash paid over at one time by the United States to Napoleon as First Consul in 1803 it was common rumor—not very general, you may be sure, however—that 7,500,000 francs of the sum was never accounted for in vouchers. This might easily have been. Napoleon was then First Consul for life. He could do just what he chose and nobody dared call him to account.

It is not very difficult to hide money in large sums, too, so it can not be found, be the search ever so careful. Ferdinand Ward has some millions thus covered up, and no human being has ever yet found a clew to the stolen treasure. It was said and believed by many people, too, that Stephen Girard, of Philadelphia, had a large sum in his hands belonging to Napoleon I., which he would have handed over to him had he succeeded in getting away to the United States after Waterloo, as he tried to do. Louis XVIII., through his Minister of Finance, did all in his power to discover this hidden treasure, but those who knew would never tell. They probably took it themselves when the Emperor died in 1821. But it is a very interesting and romantic story, the disappearance absolutely of the greatest fortune in the world's history up to that time, leaving not a trace behind.—Washington Herald.

FOOLISH CRIMINALS.

Men Who Fight a Losing Battle and March to Certain Defeat.

The professional criminal, looking at the subject from the low plane of personal advantage, is certainly a weak-minded and short-sighted individual. There is an element of idiocy in all "crooks," however shrewd or cunning they may be in the prosecution of their nefarious specialties. They all possess a short-sighted moral vision which does not enable them to discern the relation between cause and effect. He is, indeed, a dull pupil whom a hundred generations of criminal history does not teach that "he who sows the wind shall reap the whirlwind." But still they go fatuitously sowing the wind expecting to garner in their sheaves of gentle summer zephyrs.

That the way of the transgressor is hard has been proven as indubitably by experience as any proposition in geometry. Bank burglars, who have held in their possession millions of stolen property, almost inevitably come to the lowest grade of poverty and are finally taken and die in confinement and disgrace. Expert forgers and counterfeiters—men of unusual artistic skill and cleverness—almost invariably lose their ill-gotten gains, and die like outcasts in prisons or penitentiaries, who, if their talents had not been so woefully misspent, might have lived in the affluence which their skill would have gathered around them. Surely there is some fatal obliquity in the moral and intellectual vision of such men. The most cunning shrewdness of the criminal is akin to idiocy.

The feats of the Jessie James gang were frequently bold and brilliantly executed; but no man of well-balanced mind looking from the low standpoint of prudence, would engage in such enterprises. They subject themselves to a life of insanity, violence and danger; and detection and punishment is inevitable. The career of the notorious Stain gang in New England forcibly illustrates this truth. Stain and Cromwell are evidently men of good abilities and some education, who might have attained a position of respectability, if not of prominence, in any community. But they fatuitously pursued another course; and now in poverty, and amid the execrations of good and bad men alike, they stand in the shadow of the gallows. From the days of Captain Kidd to the days of David Stain it has been proven a thousand times that he who wars on society as a criminal inevitably fights a losing battle and marches to certain defeat.

The fool and the criminal are brothers.—Yankee Blade.

CANINE INSTINCT.

How Dogs Are Enabled to Follow the Trail of Their Masters.

Some very interesting experiments were recently made in England to determine how it is that the dog is enabled to follow the trail of his master. A gentleman used for a series of tests a pointer with which he had hunted for several years. Every precaution was taken to prevent the dog's being guided by any thing but the sense of smell. The hunter, with his hunting boots on, first walked about a mile over the grass, turning in various directions, and then hid himself. The dog, not having seen him, of course, was brought to the starting-place, when he at once took the trail and followed it rapidly and accurately until he found his master.

The hunter then headed a procession of twelve persons walking Indian file, each man being careful to place his feet in the footprints of the man preceding him. After walking two hundred yards the hunter turned to the right, followed by one-half of the men, and the other half turned to the left. Each party made a number of turns and detours, and then concealed themselves. The dog, when put on the trail, followed it promptly, and at the point of separation, without a moment's hesitation, turned to the right, as his master had done.

A stranger to the dog then put on the master's hunting boots, and after the same precautions the dog followed the tracks as quickly as he had followed his master's. When the master wore the boots of the stranger the dog would not follow, nor would he follow the trail of the stranger when he walked with naked feet, but he did follow his master under the same conditions, though slowly and with much hesitation. The hunter tried wearing new boots, and the dog refused to follow. He then resumed his hunting-boots, after pasting paper under the soles and along the sides; but the dog paid no attention to the trail until a point was reached where a very small piece of the paper had fallen from the boot; from that on the trail was followed rapidly.

In the last experiment, the hunter, with his hunting-boots on free of paper, walked fifty yards, and then drew off his boots and walked three hundred yards barefoot, but holding his boots in his hand, which hung down. Then, raising his arm and still holding the boots, he walked three hundred yards more. The dog when placed on the trail followed the whole distance without hesitation.—Boston Advertiser.

—A Norwich, Conn., man who had stocked his pond with a rare and handsome breed of ducks, found that they were slowly disappearing, but where they went he could not determine. One day a visitor, sitting on the piazza, said: "You've got queer ducks. I've seen two of them dive, but they haven't come up yet." This was a suggestion to be acted upon. The owner drew off the water from the pond, and found seventeen snapping turtles. He killed them, and now the ducks do not disappear, or at least when they dive they come up again.

PRACTICAL CAUTIONS.

An Ounce of Prevention From the Insurance Companies.

Every year millions of dollars' worth of the material resources of the country are swept away by fire. This loss is an absolute one. It can not be replaced nor repaired. The individual owner does not feel this if adequately insured, but, nevertheless, with every fire the country at large is poorer by the amount of the loss.

It is alarming to note that in spite of our continually improving facilities for fighting fire, and the increasing numbers of fire-proof buildings, the gross losses throughout the country grow steadily greater year by year. Below is an accurate tabulated statement of the country's yearly loss by fire, which is not pleasant reading:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1878 | $64,315,000 | 1883 | $100,149,000 |
| 1879 | 77,708,000 | 1884 | 110,000,000 |
| 1880 | 74,613,000 | 1885 | 102,818,000 |
| 1881 | 81,283,000 | 1886 | 104,924,000 |
| 1882 | 84,505,000 | | |

Our national resources are so immense that the country has not yet seriously felt this drain, but it is evident that the time must come when it will feel it. This is especially true if we take into consideration the amount of money spent annually in fighting fire. New York's fire department alone costs more than $1,000,000 annually; its insurance patrol more than $100,000.

The principal insurance companies, actuated by such considerations, have adopted a plan which is so simple and promises to be so effective that it deserves to have public attention called to it.

They have printed and propose to distribute gratuitously through every building in the city, a set of "Fire Cautions." Their idea is that if these are posted in conspicuous places in office buildings, factories, tenement houses and the like, the practical cautions they embody will not be apt to be forgotten. Certainly, if they are remembered and always carefully observed, accidental fires would be few and far between.

The cautions are given below. It can be seen that they are sensible, practical and intelligible:

Don't allow stoves or heaters on your premises which are not securely set on stone, cemented brick or metal, and be sure that all woodwork near the stoves or pipes is carefully protected with metal.

Don't allow any loose-jointed gas-brackets on your premises which could be swung against woodwork, or any gas brackets without wire screens or globes, if hay, straw, light materials or window curtains are near them.

Don't allow any electric lights or wires on your premises which are not properly protected.

Don't allow steam-pipes to be in contact with wood or inflammable material.

Don't allow any kerosene oil lamps to be filled after dark. Filling lamps near a fire is dangerous.

Don't forget to keep the lamps filled, and wicks in good order. When the oil is low it generates gas, which is liable to explode.

Don't allow benzine, gasoline, naptha or explosives in your place. Your insurance policy prohibits it.

Don't allow ashes to be put in a wooden box or barrel in your building. Always have an iron ash can.

Don't allow any oily waste or rags to be thrown on the floor, but only in a metal can, with cover, and have them taken out of the building every night; they are self-igniting.

Don't allow any greasy or oily rags or papers to be mixed up with clean clippings, or a large amount of clippings to remain in your place (even if clean and in bales) than is absolutely unavoidable.

Don't allow saw-dust to be used on floors or in spittoons. It causes many fires, ignited by cigar stumps or cigarettes.

Don't allow saw-dust to be used for catching oil drippings from machines or elevator gearing. Sand is safe.

Don't allow matches to be kept loose, or in paper boxes, but only in metal or earthen safes. Those lighting only on the box are safest.

Don't allow smoking on your premises where any combustible goods or materials are used.

Don't fail to have your fire-buckets filled, and test hose and fire appliances from time to time.

Don't allow your stairs or hallways to be blocked up or used for "storage," or rubbish, hay, straw, etc., to accumulate or remain on your premises.

Don't fail to have all elevators or hoistways provided with good trap-doors or hatches, and have these shut at night.

Don't forget to close your iron shutters at night.

Don't forget that neglect and carelessness are the cause of more fires than all other things, and enforce rules to guard against them.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

—Just now a comparatively new fad has broken out among fashionables. It is installing as prime favorite, among the other antiques, the old-fashioned brass warming pan, which is now hung in the hall or library near the fireplace. They really do give a cheerful look with their brass covers, which are kept polished with dazzling brightness. They bring large prices when offered for sale. So any one who has one tucked away in some garret better bring it forth, for they possess a prize, as they are something not likely to be reproduced.—St. Louis Republican.

—All the farm implements should now be taken apart and well cleaned. Rub kerosene on the iron portions as a protection against dampness and rust. Knives should be sharpened, and all such work performed, while other farm work is not urgent.

BILL NYE AS A DOCTOR.

He Reviews a Book and Gives Some Practical Advice.

Dr. Fred. C. Valentine has just published a small, olive green volume entitled "600 Medical Don'ts." It is couched in perfectly plain language, so that it may be readily understood by any plain, self made man with a $150 cyclopedia and dictionary of medical terms in his pocket.

In a list of articles pronounced as difficult to digest I find buttered toast, salt meat, rice, sago, stale bread and tapioca. Among those articles easy of digestion Dr. Valentine names grapes, grouse and partridges. So that poor people who wish to be well and strong and avoid indigestion should avoid buttered toast, salt meat, rice and stale bread and subsist mainly upon grapes, grouse and partridges.

This is really the first time that a New York physician has had the moral courage to come out and show people how to keep well and avoid doctors' bills. There can be no doubt that people in the lower walks of life are too prone to load themselves down with toast and tapioca, when a light lunch of grouse with a few pounds of hothouse grapes or a brace of partridges and a dozen nightingales' tongues, with a little turtle soup and Neapolitan ice cream, are all they need.

Poor people often wonder why their doctors' bills are so great while the wealthy are rarely ill. This is due to the fact that poor people are too prone to eat salt pork and bread on an empty stomach and then neglect exercise. A workingman who has been assisting in digging the large subway tells me that he attributes his poor health to those causes, and says that if he had confined himself to grapes and grouse for the past ten years and then taken a canter 'cross country every forenoon on the hot trail of a light running and domestic fox, instead of eating so much fried pork and bread, and then working instead of taking regular exercise in a Victoria, he might have been alive to-day.

A SUBWAY SUFFERER.

There are many other suggestions in this little book worthy of a place in every household, such as the Don'ts, No. 534, which reads: "Don't endeavor to remove substances from the nose with pins, hairpins, etc." A person who will put kernels of corn, unanswered letters or carpet tacks up his nose should call a physician and not undertake to remove them himself, as he might tear a hole in the roof of his mouth. Don't bathe immediately after a hearty meal in rivers infested by crocodiles. This is an extract from a book of my own.

Don't sleep during the summer months with your feet out at the window. It closes the pores of the feet too suddenly, especially if the sash comes down on them in the night.

A WARNING.

Don't sleep in an elevated railway car with your head on the shoulder of a lady on whom you have not called, especially if you are very fat and partially drank. Even if you have lived in New York for years and feel that you own the town and that too many people are coming here without getting a permit from you it is a bad practice to lean on the shoulder of a lady who is not acquainted with you will you sleep off your drunk, for she might like to leave the car suddenly when she gets to her station and thus thoughtlessly perhaps break your neck.

(Some of the above Don'ts are suggested to my mind as I go along.)

Don't try to blow the breech pin out of an old gun unless you have a very strong breech and more brains than you require for ordinary business purposes.

Don't try to wrench loose the tail of an infuriated lion because you see it hanging out of his cage. They are putting the tails of lions this year more securely than ever, and he has the right to wear it outside his cage also, if it is more becoming that way.

Dr. Valentine says: "Don't allow a meal to pass without a joke between each mouthful." This will enhance the value of American humor to a great degree. Dinner will move along something like this: Mouthful of soup—"Did you ever see a horse fly? He! he!" Mouthful of bread—"I think that the Anarchists ought to Austriasized. He! he!" Bite of celery—"How did Eve get into the Garden of Eden? Give it up? Got in by Adam's Express wish!" Great laughter. More bread and silent mastication—"How did she get out? Give it up? Got snaked out!" Screams of mirth, flakes of laughter and bread crumbs pervading the air. Mouthful of roast duck reminds domestic humorist of something. "Do you know why a duck goes into the water?" Large gobs of silence and more pensive eating. Domestic humorist answers it himself as follows: "For divers reasons." More bread, ice water and general good feeling. "Why does he come out?" No answer, and no sound but that of an old joke under the table cracking its knuckles and getting ready to spring out and hit its heels together. "For sun dry purposes!" exclaims the ready and brainy man, looking casually at a memorandum on his cuff.

More dinner, and then "Why does he go in again?" Nothing can be heard but the low rumble of a thinker, perhaps, as it grapples with the great problem. "To liquidate his bill!" Yells of laughter, screams of delight and astonishing feats of digestion promoted by mirth. "And why does he again come out?" More thought and mastication, then the gastric jester says: "To make a little run on the bank," and amid a general shower of vest buttons and wads of mirth as big as hickory nuts the genial, all around tonic humorist and joy promoter goes on. Pleasant little dinner parties one of these days will telephone for a caterer or marshal of the day to inquire what will be the price per plate at his place, including appetizer, dinner, wine, fruit, dessert, finger bowls, cigars, toothpicks and Hygienic Humorist.

Brethren of the American press, the hour of our emancipation is at hand. The time is rapidly approaching when Little Tom Tucker may joke for his supper. Avant pumpkins on subscription! Avast there muskrat pelts for pay locals! Adieu thou economical party that seekest to win the indorsement of the press by laying a double yolk egg on our table with a wild cackle of delight, for we see our opportunity looming up in the distance!—New York World.

A Striking Exception.

Somebody says that the more a man has the more he wants. There are striking exceptions, however. No matter how small amount of poverty a man may have, he doesn't want any more.—Norristown Herald

FRENCHMEN IN ALGERIA.

The Contempt in Which the Arabs Hold Their Gallic Conquerors.

At that ball, as during the whole of my stay in Algeria, nothing astonished me more than the evident contempt entertained by the conquered for their conquerors; but they seemed inclined to make no effort to throw off the yoke. It is as if they felt that they were conquered, not by the French, but by some inevitable fate, to whose decree they must bow with unquestioning submission. On the other hand, the efforts which the French make to conciliate the Arabs are almost abject in the fervor of their humility. That evening, if one of the Sheiks condescended to stroll into the ball-room, half a dozen official personages advanced to bid him welcome; the Governor and his wife overwhelmed him with attention, and a special officer was told off to walk by his side and give him any information he might require. If this were done in the hope of exciting gratitude, it was labor in vain, the Sheik received the advances of his entertainers with stately courtesy, but evidently regarded all homage as his just due.

Nor is it only in the palace that this extraordinary inversion of the usual relationship between the conquered and conquerors exists; in the streets, public assemblies, everywhere, the same efforts are made by the French officials to avoid all causes of offense. The gendarmerie and the soldiers are literally hidden away in dark nooks and caves, lest their presence should wound the susceptibilities of the native race; and on the few occasions when they must necessarily be brought to the fore, apparently they receive private instructions that the Arabs are not to be subjected to any of those petty tyrannies which it so delights the soul of a French official to practice on his own countrymen. An amusing instance of this occurred at the Algiers races, a few days after the ball. A part of the ground near the grand stand was surrounded by a red cord, as a sign that the public was excluded. Through some misunderstanding a motley crowd of Europeans broke down the red cord and crowded into the reserved space. The gendarmes, bristling with fury, rode into their midst, and, striking right and left with perfectly unnecessary violence, drove the people away. Some half-hour later the same thing occurred; again the red cord fell, and a crowd took possession of the reserved ground; but this time the crowd was Arab, evidently of the poorest class, but still Arab. I expected a repetition of the former scene, but to my astonishment one gendarme looked at another, he made a sign to a third, who looked for directions to a fourth; but no one ventured to address the intruders.

At length some official of importance was sent for, and after considerable delay, hesitation and consultation, this person did summon sufficient courage to rife up to the inclosure; but far from there being any signs of the violence and abuse to which the Europeans had been subjected he bowed to the Arabs as if they were sovereign princes and he the most lowly of their subjects. In the blandest of tones he apologized for disturbing them, and entered into the most elaborate explanation of the why and wherefore of the case; but all his prayers and entreaties were in vain. The Arabs listened to what he said with a courtesy equal to his own; the staid gravity of their faces never relaxed, but move they would not, and did not; and at length the officer rode away with a gesture of despair, and gave orders that they were to be left in possession of the ground!—All the Year Round.

AN OMAHA MISER.

One of Omaha's Most Peculiar and Wealthiest Citizens.

"That coarsely dressed man with a Jewish cast of countenance is worth half a million," remarked a gentleman to a reporter. "He told me one day that he owned forty tenement rookeries. They are all on land worth a great deal of money, and it keeps the old miser who owns them busy repairing roofs, locks and cellar doors. He lives in one little room of one of the meanest looking houses of the lot, on Fifteenth and Leavenworth, during the day and sleeps in a cold barn of a wooden building belonging to him on Thirteenth street. His workshop has but one window. It is entered by a double door, which is protected by iron bars. In this dingy room the old man mends his clothing, tinkers his locks, keeps his valuable papers, and stores the waste lumber that blows off his lots or comes into his possession in other ways. A small, sheet-iron stove, old and rickety as his buildings, fed from the wood piled up in the room, keeps him warm in winter, and a twenty-five-cent kerosene lamp furnishes him light. A desk, two chairs and a box covered with an old piece of carpet, complete the furnishing of the place. The sole owner and proprietor of all this elegance has lots in all parts of the city, land in every township in the county, and a fat bank account. He has no family, but lives alone. He never sells any thing; never improves any property. He exists solely to make and save money and to buy property. His agent must be consulted about every conveyance, and on his judgment he most relies. Always agreeable, yet suspicious of every man who enters his domicile, he is a veritable miser, who will drop off one of these days and leave all his property here for lawyers to quarrel over. He must be sixty years old and half his life has been spent in Omaha. His faith in the city induced him to buy much and sell nothing."—Omaha World.

INHABITANTS OF MARS.

A Famous Astronomer Thinks That It Is Peopled By Remarkable Beings.

A paper has recently been published by Sig. Schiaparelli, who is, perhaps, the most eminent of Italian astronomers, of the result of observations taken by him at Milan of the physical conditions of the planet Mars. These observations were taken in the years 1877, 1879 and 1882—periods during which Mars approached, in following its elliptical course, nearer to our earth than it ordinarily comes. It is well known that the geography of this planet has been for some time past carefully studied. Maps have been drawn giving the seas and continents that divide the surface of that planet, and, as a distinguished astronomer has recently said, so far as the polar regions are concerned, we know more of those on the planet Mars than we do of those on our own world. It is known that Mars has an atmosphere that would permit of some form of animal life, perhaps the same that we find upon the earth; that the snow falls in winter and melts away in the spring. Indeed, it may be assumed that it has mountains, valleys and broad plains covered with vegetation, much as we are accustomed to find it in our country districts, except that, while the natural tint of grass and leaf with us is green, in Mars it is evidently red.

All this, however, has been known to astronomers for some time. What seems to be a new discovery is that the land surface of the planet Mars is, or appears to be, divided into great canals thirty miles or more in width, and extending in absolutely straight and often paraelled lines from the seacoast for a thousand miles or more into the interior, where they sometimes intersect with other canals running directly at right angles. This would seem to indicate a direction of forces different from those commonly displayed by nature. But what is even more remarkable, if we are to trust our authority, is that observation has shown in some cases these assumed canals seem to be in process of construction.

Sig. Schiaparelli asserts that he was greatly surprised to find that the chart of the surface of Mars, carefully prepared by him from his own observations of 1879, was found defective in 1882, because during the interval the number of his assumed canals had increased. But his surprise was changed to astonishment on finding, during the course of his observations in 1882, that at short intervals what might be termed paralled canals came, as it were, into existence. He could hardly assert that he watched their formation, though in a certain degree he was able to do this. What conclusion he draws from this assertion he does not say, leaving it for future observers, when, in a few years more, a chance for further observation takes place to draw their own deductions. But, apparently, the assumption might be made—premising the accuracy of these asserted facts—that the planet Mars is inhabited by a race of beings possessed of enormous powers, having the knowledge and strength needed to perform in a short space of time what would be almost equivalent to the construction of a canal that would reach from the Atlantic Ocean to Chicago, with a width of the State of Massachusetts. Of course, these assertions will be accepted with a very great degree of skepticism, but, none the less, they will add not a little to the curiosity and interest with which further observations on the planet Mars will be watched for.—Boston Herald.

GILBERT'S HYPOTHESIS.

An Explanation of the Phenomena of Terrestrial Magnetism.

The phenomena of terrestrial magnetism are explained by regarding the earth as a great magnet of irregular structure, so that its magnetism is somewhat unequally distributed over the entire mass. Spheres have been formed of large masses of loadstone, which so act on small dipping needles carried over their surface as to give results approaching in character the irregular lines expressing the magnetic elements of the earth. The supposition that the earth was a great magnet was first advanced by Dr. William Gilbert, who was Queen Elizabeth's physician, in 1600. Though there have been a number of hypotheses concerning the distribution of the centers of magnetism through the earth's mass, philosophers are generally agreed that Gilbert's hypothesis is correct. The "dip" of the magnetic needle which locates the magnetic pole was first noted about 1576. In the northern hemisphere the north end of the needle points downward, making an angle with the horizon, in the southern hemisphere the south pole of the magnet points downward. This is what is called the dip of the needle. This downward inclination amounts, at the latitude and longitude of New York, to an angle of 73 degrees with the horizon. If the needle is carried northward and westward from this point its dip is seen to increase, until, having reached latitude 70 deg. 5 min. north, and longitude 96 deg. 46 min. west, we reach a point where the needle takes an exactly perpendicular position. This phenomenon was first noted by Commodore Ross in 1832, and this point is called the north magnetic pole of the earth. It is inferred from observations on the dip in the southern hemisphere that a south magnetic pole—where the needle will be vertical with the south pole downward—exists about latitude 70 deg. south and longitude 125 deg. east of Greenwich, but no explorer has ever reached this point. There is also a line about midway between these two poles, where the needle does not dip, but holds a truly horizontal position. This is known as the magnetic equator. It is a very irregular line, passing around the earth in the tropical regions, and crosses the geographic equator at four points. It has been located with considerable accuracy by observers.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A DOCILE MULE.

Story of One that Learned Wisdom in a Single Lesson.

A mule is generally taken for the very type of ignorance and obstinacy; but here is an account of one that learned wisdom in a single lesson—which is doing better than some who think themselves very good scholars. The teller of the story, Mr. Robert Crawford, was traveling in South America, and had come to a hard place in the Andes.

My companion, whose mule was old and very steady, tried it first, while I with excited interest looked on. He gradually got the mule to the base of the rock, round which there was just room to creep. The patient brute, glancing down into the chasm below, seemed to realize the position in a moment. Leaning inwards with its side against the face of the rock, it worked inch by inch, round the projecting point, till the secure ground beyond was safely reached. Then came my turn to advance, and, leading my mule, a young one, cautiously toward the spot, I moved with difficulty round to the upper side for the purpose of taking off the saddle, but, with the proverbial stubbornness of its race or the confidence of inexperienced youth, the moment I had left its head, on went the mule, and no threats or blandishments of mine could prevail on it to stop.

Arrived at the difficult point, and following the example of the one before it, or, more probably, the teaching of instinct, it lay up against the face of the rock, and proceeded to pass the obstacle in a much more rapid and vigorous manner than that already described. A projecting point caught the saddle, and the mule, impatient of the hindrance, struggled to get past, and, losing its balance, was precipitated down the slope. I looked, expecting to see my mule's body roll over into the chasm below; but, with the activity of a goat, it gained its legs, after a fall of some twenty feet, and climbed cautiously up to where I stood. If ever there was a penitent mule, that was one. Shame for its impatient behavior, that had caused the catastrophe, was expressed in its eyes as clearly as if it had the power to utter its contrition verbally. It was a reformed mule from that moment, and followed me for the remainder of our route with the patient and sagacious trust of a dog.—Youth's Companion.

All in His Eye.

"I can not imagine what is in my eye," said Jones senior the other day. "It must have been a fly or other insect that hurt it."

"That's nothing," said Jones junior, in his airy way, "I have had a young lady in my eye all summer, and you haven't heard me complain about it, eye-ther."—Detroit Free Press.

—"Clara has returned my engagement ring," sighed Charley, "and all is over between us." "What kind of a ring is it?" asked experienced George—"diamond?" "No; a cheap affair; only cost a couple of dollars." "Well, don't you give up the ship, old man; she'll be all right in a day or two. It is only when a girl lets go of a diamond ring that she really means business."—Harper's Bazar.

The income of Claus Spreckels has been as high as eight thousand dollars a day from his sugar refineries. He has a monopoly of the sugar business on the Pacific Coast.

The total amount of securities held in trust for the State School Fund amounts to two millions, six hundred and eighty thousand, eight hundred dollars. The money is invested in State and county bonds.

The Enterprise says petty jealousies retard the progress of Reno. In every community there are men who have so much guts and gizzard that there is no room for heart and brains. These are the people who obstruct progress by petty jealousies.

Roadmaster James is improving the street running east and west on the north of the Courthouse. He will build a bridge across the brook, and level the roadway down past the new school house, making a nice street.

Mr. Henry Levy gave a special invitation and entertained a large number of his friends at a midnight supper last Wednesday night. About fifty guests were present and it need not be said that they were well entertained.

Mrs. James Moffett is the happy possessor of one of the finest saddle horses in the State. The animal was brought into the valley by Mr. Fred Holbert and was bought by Mr. Moffett and presented to his wife. The horse is a beauty and is perfectly trained.

Washington's Birthday was celebrated at Independence by a party given by the old soldiers. The attendance was large and everybody appeared to have a good time. the ball was held in the Agricultural Pavilion. The company filled Mairs' and Levy's hotels at supper time.

There is a big mining excitement at Carson. In boring for an artesian well on land belonging to Mrs. Langtry quartz was found at a depth of 250 feet that is reported to assay over four hundred dollars a ton. Now mine locations are reported being made all over the neighborhood.

Anschlag, the Los Angeles murderer, was tried and found guilty of murder in the first degree within a month of the time he committed the crime. Now if he shall be hanged speedily public confidence will be greatly strengthened in the efficacy of the courts to punish crime.

Among those who came up from Lone Pine to attend the party on Washington's Birthday were Mr. and Mrs. Decker, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart, Mr. W. K. Miller, Mrs. McCall, Mrs. Richards, Miss Wimberly, Miss Della Rittgers, Mr. Manuel Diaz Mr. B. Lasky, Mr. E. H. Etwards and Mr. John Lucas.

A dairy has been opened by the Crocker Brothers at Big Pine. Cows will be added as rapidly as possible until the number shall reach one hundred. The location is one of the best in the State for a dairy; the pasture is first rate, the drainage good, and an abundance of pure, cold mountain water.

Three men who lived at Grantsville, Nevada, are supposed to have perished. The Esmeralda News says John McComb, James Court and Charlie Court left Grantsville more than nine weeks ago to make a prospecting tour through Death valley; they expected to be gone three weeks but nothing has since been heard of them.

Last Sunday a cyclone struck the town of Mount Vernon, Illinois. Three hundred dwellings and places of business were destroyed. Eighty-five persons were killed outright and many others so badly injured that they will die. A fire broke out after the cyclone had done its work and destroyed much of what was left of the town. No wonder people come to California.

The Crocker Brothers and Richard Hessian are butchering their own cattle and shipping the meat to points along the C. & C. road. Hotel keepers and others at Candelaria, Hawthorne, and even Dayton, Carson and Reno, could be supplied with beef by these parties much cheaper than they could be supplied by the local butchers. Excellent beef can be put on board the cars at Big Pine at five and a half to six cents per pound, and delivered at little more than half the price now paid at the places named.

C. & C. Extension.

There appears to be a good deal of interest taken by parties in New York in the extension of the Carson & Colorado railroad. Press dispatches are quite frequent on the subject. One of the latest says that D. O. Mills has publicly stated that the extension of the road from Keeler to Mojave is among the certainties; but that nothing will be done until he shall come here and look through the country through which the railroad will pass. There is nothing new in this statement; from when the first rail was laid it was certain that sooner or later the railroad would be extended south. Mr. Mills already knows all about the country through which the railroad will pass. It may be that the delay in beginning the work of extension is caused by waiting for the advancement of other enterprises with which the C. & C. road might be connected.

County Central Committee.

The following named gentlemen have been appointed as County Central Committee for the American Party: For Independence, Stephen G. Gregg, William Hedge and A. J. Davis; for Bishop Creek, W. H. George, Peter Laird, John H. Stoutenborough, A. Friedline; Lone Pine, W. K. Miller, James E. Reynolds, John Dodge; Big Pine, Henry Malone, N. Saylor; Keeler M. W. Trask; Darwin, Ed. F. Rowell; Cerro Gordo, John Randle; Panamint, F. T. Fuller.

Poorly Constructed.

The flues in the Courthouse are so wretchedly constructed that fires cannot be lighted in any of the rooms in the north side of the building except when fires are not wanted, Even when there is no fire in these rooms the smoke from the flues of the rooms on the south side of the building convert the other rooms into gloomy tophets, and the occupants are compelled to seek quarters elsewhere. The rooms of the Superior Judge, District Attorney, Treasurer, and the Court room are all in this condition.

Mojave.

Mojave, California, is likely to have a boom. It is bound to become a railroad centre. The railroads from Salt Lake to Los Angeles must go there. It is an oasis in a desert region. The Carson and Colorado, now at Keeler, will connect with the Southern Pacific and Atlantic and Pacific at Mojave. As soon as D. O. Mills arrives on the Coast he will arrange for the extension of the Carson and Colorado from its present terminus.—Enterprise.

The Leap Year Ball.

The ball at Big Pine on Wednesday evening next will be the first opportunity given the ladies of the valley to take advantage of the Leap Year privilege, and be the invitors instead of the invited. No young lady should neglect the opportunity, as no young man can possibly neglect or refuse the invitation. Such a welcome will be given everybody at Crocker's hotel as will double the enjoyment of the occasion.

Photographs and Enlarged Pictures.

J. H. Crockwell will start from Bishop Creek in the early part of March and will give Big Pine, Independence, Lone Pine, Keeler and Darwin a short call He guarantees his work and assures you of satisfaction. For enlarging small pictures taken free. All orders given T. Pettit for enlarged work will receive prompt attention.

The Democratic Central Committee met at Washington on Wednesday to determine where the National Convention should be held. There were strong hopes that San Francisco would be chosen, but a majority of the Committee decided in favor of St. Louis. This is quite a disappointment to the Pacific Coast. The Convention would have been gloriously entertained at San Francisco.

GREAT LUCK.

Good Fortune That Came by Chance and Business Sagacity.

One cannot help being struck with the important part the element of chance plays in the history of most men who acquire great fortunes. It is peculiarly illustrated in the career of Thomas H Williams, a California six millionaire. He went from Kentucky to the Pacific slope in 1849, and settled in Virginia city. As attorney for a mining company, he acquired a claim against it for $1,500 for services, and when the company failed he bid in its mine for the amount of his claim.

He moved to San Francisco, year rolled on and the transaction had passed from his mind, when he was one day approached by a representative of Flood Mackay & O'Brien, who offered him $100,000 for his long-forgotten mine

He was not a greenhorn and he at once refused the offer, as he did successive offers of $250,000 and $500,000 But when a member of the great firm came to see him with proffers of negotiation they were not rejected and resulted in the reception of the firm's check for $6,000,000.

It was a great piece of luck, but the luck was supplemented by keen business sagacity.

In April, 1887, Charles W. Sprague an orange grower at Chaseville, Fla was lying in bed, suffering the "torments of the cursed" with disease of the kidneys, with which he had been troubled for two years. He had been under the treatment of an eminent physician but kept growing worse. One day when, as he says, "even hope itself had become inanimate," a casual acquaintance happened in and advised the trial of Warner's safe cure.

He hesitated, because it was a proprietary medicine, but the testimonials of its efficacy were so convincing that, as a business man, he could not doubt the wisdom of trying it. The result was that May 20th, 1887, he wrote: "From the first dose I commenced to improve, and have now recovered my health."

Mr. Williams owes his large fortune and Mr. Sprague owes his life to chance, supplemented by good business judgment. It is no doubt true that fortune knocks at least once at the door of every man, but it is not every man, it seems, who has the good judgment to grasp opportunity by the forelock.

The people of Olema are indignant that a report should have gained currency that they had a case of small-pox among them. It is stated there is none of the disease in Marin county.

George B. Henderson, Superintendent of the Livermore Gas Company, has disappeared, leaving a note stating that he would soon be beyond all earthly troubles. His accounts are straight.

UNEXPECTED FORTUNES.

An Optician and a Magician Awake and Find Themselves Rich.

"Monday night I was poor and Tuesday I was rich,' said Mr. Charles H. Scheffreen, a few days ago to a Courier reporter. That he had very recently been poor no further evidence was needed to convince the reporter than the almost poverty-stricken home in which he had been found in Russell place; that suddenly he had been made rich the reporter had written proof in his possession, as had also Mr. Scheffreen, who, with well founded delight showed his visitor a receipt, signed by the cashier of one of our largest banks for a negotiable order for thousands of dollars, which had been deposited for collection that very day. "Yes, I am indeed a fortunate man. But I had faith and knew it would come sooner or later. 'How many children have I?' There is this little girl," said the elated speaker pointing to a pretty black-eyed little Jewess, perhaps ten or eleven years of age, "and five others, besides a daughter who is married. Yes, I have had a tough time of it and had it not been for the hope of some day having just this luck I cannot tell what I should have done. I left Russia five years ago with my family, thinking I should have no trouble at all in making a good living. I found it much harder to get along than I thought I should. Selling spectacles and eye-glasses, which is my business, is very hard work, there are so many doing the same thing, and many days I made no money at all.

"There is one thing, though, my friend, I have always made money enough for, and that was to buy a ticket each month since I have been here in The Louisiana State Lottery; and, sir, you see what has come of it. Ha! ha! I told my wife," continued the animated speaker with a chuckle, "I should get it some day, and I have, I have!"

Mr. Scheffreen seemed very anxious that the public should know of his good fortune. "I wish I could tell every man in Boston to buy a ticket," he said. "I have told every friend I have seen, and many of them have already taken my advice. Yes, put it in the Courier by all means, let everybody know it." A strange incident connected with Mr. Scheffreen's drawing a part of the second capital prize of $100,000, and one which would seem to indicate that nothing had power to prevent him from getting it, was the fact that, although he ordered his ticket several weeks before the drawing, by some accident or other it had not reached him as late as five o'clock on the Monday afternoon immediately preceding the Tuesday on which the distribution of prizes took place, and it was the new ticket that he ordered at that late hour by telegraph which proved to have on it the lucky number.

On the same day that Mr. Scheffreen drew his fortune Mr. C. Fredericks, of Norman Street, who held another part of the same ticket was also equally enriched. Mr. Fredericks, who is a traveling magician, was away from his residence performing with a dramatic company when the reporter called, and therefore could not be interviewed. Enough, however, was learned about him to assure one that the money was as much needed as it was welcome. With none of his cards, or any of his other magic paraphernalia has he ever produced such a wonderful transformation as his good luck did for him on December 13th with the little engraved ticket issued by The Louisiana State Lottery Company.—Boston (Mass.) Courier, Jan. 1.

HAZING AND ITS REMEDY.

The Evil Being Traditional and Deep Seated Requires Heroic Treatment.

The evil is deep seated and has its tap root in the past. It is traditional. The older colleges, if they are blessed, are also cursed with traditions. And college traditions are easily born, and die hard. These disorderly tendencies are not only inherited from the past in this country, but from the mother country also. The extent of their survival there may be seen in the hazings, fightings and midnight maraudings with which "Tom Brown at Rugby" is overweighed. They have survived, with additions, in American colleges. Members of advanced classes promptly instruct the younger classes what is always done, and what, therefore, they are bound to do. The newer men aspire to be as "smart" as their predecessors, and so they must have hazing, rushes, "bloody Monday," freshman beer, reciprocal hornings, small maraudings, and what not? The effect of these foolish traditions at one particular stage of the college course, in the sudden but transient transformation of a considerable number of well minded and well mannered young men, is something as unfailing as it is surprising and otherwise unaccountable.

In other communities it is the acknowledged rule that the whole population is banded together to detect and punish wrongdoing. In college communities the case is reversed; the combination is to prevent detection. It is seldom the case that one student will give information concerning another that might lead even to his reformation. And when it becomes apparently a question of penalty, not only will young men of no principle disregard the truth, but men of high principle will generally leave college sooner than aid in rectifying the wrong. In one case, where it became alike necessary for the safety of father and son that the father should know of the notorious habits of intoxication into which the son had fallen, he went away convinced of gross injustice done by the faculty to the young man, because he was informed by classmates that the statements were untrue. It should be said, however, that one of these classmates, after graduation, had the manhood to come to a college officer and say: "I lied to Mr. ——."

In another instance, a case of assault upon a professor's house, a whole class, including, with one exception, all its best men, were induced to agree beforehand that they would not answer any question as to their owns whereabouts at a given time—though many of them were quietly studying in their rooms—lest the circle of inquiry should thus be narrowed toward the offenders; and they submitted to suspension rather than answer the question. Illustrative facts of this kind might be accumulated to any extent. But it is not necessary. Every college man can bear witness to the general state of the case.

After young men have been fully and fairly warned that they will be held amenable to the law of the land, the application of the law is not to be withholden. This remedy has sometimes been applied with excellent effect. In one case the victim waited till his tormentors disclosed themselves and brought him before a magistrate. One of them proved to be a son of the chief justice of the state, and the settlement was easy and lasting. In another college two young men, under arrest for gross violence, fled and never put in an appearance again.

In a third institution certain college rioters, sons of wealthy parents, lay in the lockup while their class was graduating. These are hard remedies, to the last degree undesirable, but the abuses are still more undesirable, and if all other educational influences prove ineffectual, then the law must be the educator. The application of the remedy in a few instances would render further application unnecessary.—The Forum.

Banker and Depositor.

It is generally supposed that banks are eager to receive deposits from all sources and pay little attention to the character of the depositor, provided they get their money. This is a very great mistake. Good banks are not in the habit of opening accounts with every man who wants to deposit without knowing something of their customers' business methods. It is almost as hard to become a depositor in some of the strong eastern banks as it is to get a position in one of them, and the depositor must come highly recommended before his money is accepted. The fact is, the relation between a banker and his depositor is a confidential one, and the banker cannot afford to have tricky or dishonest patrons whom he knows he must watch all the time. He would rather let them keep their money and have nothing to do with them.—Globe-Democrat.

A Grief Stricken Ant.

Ants not only recognize one another after separation for more than a year, but there are evidences of strong affection between them. After keeping one nest of ants for seven years Sir John Lubbock had still two survivors, and this pair finally died within a week of each other, after living together two years longer. The shock produced by the loss of her companion was the only apparent cause of the death of the last member of this remarkable colony.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A Wonderful Grapevine.

Mr. A. F. Tift has upon his place in Key West, Fla., a wonderful grapevine covering a great trellis. This vine bears four crops every year. The grapes grow in exceedingly compact clusters, many of them weighing as much as eight pounds, and the vine is literally loaded with bunches. It is a native of the West India islands, probably of Jamaica. As an illustration of the dense nature of the bunches, the grapes grow so thick upon them that the center grapes frequently cannot reach the sunlight to mature. The outside grapes can be picked off as needed, and the mass of grapes beneath the outside layer left to ripen.

Foot and Meter.

According to Mr. E. G. Ravenstein, the English foot is used as the standard of length by countries having 471,000,000 inhabitants, the meter by 347,091,000 people and the Castilian foot by 5,905,000. Denmark and Russia are the only countries in continental Europe which have not adopted the meter.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Not a Drop to Drink.

At least there is one locality in the wide world where prohibition prevails, and that is on the waters of the North sea. By an agreement recently entered into by the powers of Europe, the sale of liquor to fishermen and sailors in that sea is prohibited.—Atlanta Constitution.

NEW TORPEDO BOAT.

How General Berdan Proposes to Blow Up the Biggest Men-of-War.

There has been on exhibition in this city, a model for a new torpedo boat, the invention of General Berdan, which it is claimed will very effectively blow out of existence the largest ironclad afloat. Contracts have been made with the chief European powers for the use of this boat, and General Berdan says that it has been practically accepted by the United States Government. A stock company with a capital of one million dollars has been formed in this country for the manufacture of this class of boats.

General Berdan said, in conversation with a reporter: "There always has been a great number of difficulties in the way of the successful working of a torpedo boat. The netting having put an effectual stop to the attack of torpedoes, it was necessary to find some way of circumventing it. It is a well-known fact that in order to disable a vessel it is necessary to attack her from below. A torpedo put against her side would only injure one of her compartments, and she might get away. Shooting a torpedo at a vessel would be a good deal like throwing a knife at a man across the street, with more chances of missing than hitting him in a vital part. The problem to be solved was how to go up to the vessel, place a torpedo under her bottom, and destroy her completely. This I have solved.

"A heavily armored ram, of high speed, a double-ender, is used. The spur of the ram is only six feet long, and the method adopted for its protection is something quite new in the construction of war-ships. A ram is effective only with a direct blow; a glancing blow will bend or break the spur and render the boat useless. To save the spur I have adopted the ordinary ferry-boat deck; the glancing blow will be against this and the spur will be saved. The great stability of this deck will enable the boat to stand a great shock without danger to it. Underneath this deck there are four screws for the propulsion of the boat, two on each side. These are connected with shafts so that they can be run in opposite directions and the boat can be turned on her own center. In order that she may not be obliged to attack small boats that may attack her, another and smaller boat of the same design will go with her to protect her.

"The torpedo is attached to a long arm, which, when not in actual use, is run up against her side, under the buffer deck. The boat is sent directly against the enemy, and as soon as she strikes this arm is swung down under the netting hung out around the ship, and the torpedo exploded against the bottom of the vessel. One torpedo will be quite sufficient to destroy any war ship. The arm is run by a shaft which drives it against the bottom of a vessel at a speed of thirty feet per second. The force of a revolving shaft continues the pressure and the cartridge is exploded. After the explosion the torpedo shaft can back out, the arm can be sent back into its place and another torpedo attached, and she is ready for another attack. There is one of these arms on each side of the boat, so that both or either can be used according to the need. I expect before long to make a trial against a ship anchored out at sea properly protected by netting, and I will blow her up at first attack. We are all ready to go ahead, the company has been formed and the money to build will be forthcoming."—N. Y. Post.

AT THE SYRUP FOUNTAIN.

Non-Alcoholic Drinks which Sizzle from the Faucets of a Druggist.

"Give me the newspaper man's drink," said a nervous stranger this morning to a dainty clerk in a Park row drug store.

The dainty clerk promptly turned a silver faucet of the big syrup fountain, and there sizzled forth a frothy liquid of a dull buff color. The stranger raised the liquid to his lips and swallowed it in two gulps. A bitter taste was left on his palate, and he made several wry faces. "What's that stuff made of, anyhow?" he asked the clerk.

"Phosphorus, iron, quinine and strychnine."

"Strychnine?" gasped the stranger.

"Eggsactly; but don't be alarmed. The quantity of strychnine is very small—just enough to brace the nerves; and the iron vitalizes the blood, the quinine is for the liver and the phosphorus brightens the brain."

The clerk reeled this off like a man that had often said it before.

For a minute the stranger's face wore a pensive look. Then he smiled. A feeling of gentle exhilaration was creeping through his frame. His blood was sensibly quickened. His nerves grew strong and steady.

The fountain from which the syrup was extracted is a mammoth affair. Within its marble walls are forty receptacles containing the usual fruit syrups and Moxie's nerve food, essence of oats, orgeat, beef tea, pepsoline, chicken broth, imperial elixir and carbonated waters. The carbonated waters are generated by the action of sulphuric acid on marble dust.

A dashing Spaniard, with his senorita linked to his elbow, entered the store and called for orgeat. "Orgeat?" said the stranger. "What is orgeat?"

"That's the temperance drink of the New York Frenchmen and Spaniards. It is made of sweet and sour almonds grown in the Mediterranean countries. These almonds are pounded to paste in a mortar. The paste is then put into a towel and all the milk twisted out. To this milk is added pulverized sugar and orange flower water. Then you have orgeat."

While the druggist was speaking a sickly looking man walked in and critically eyed everybody in the store. Some bottles of patent medicine, wearing yellow top coats, held his attention several minutes.

"Give me a drink of pepsoline if it's good for dyspepsia. If it ain't I don't want it." He got his pepsoline and hurried out, banging the door after him.

"He's one of our dyspeptic patients," smiled the druggist. "We have about 200 of them. They come in every day, eye the patent medicine awhile, and then call for the fountain syrup, pepsoline."

Then a handsome and richly dressed lady walked in and contracting her lips to a pucker called for "syrup of essence of oats."

"The girl of the period," continued the druggist, "always asks for chocolate—cold chocolate in the summer, hot chocolate in the winter, chocolate the year round. The dandy darkey takes

STORIES ABOUT MEN.

He Wanted to Buy a Jewsharp from Platt Evans.

Cal Thomas, who always has a good story to tell, has this one on Platt Evans, a stuttering joker, who was one of the early pioneers of Cincinnati: "In early days," says Cal, "it used to be thought capital fun to send a countryman from store to store inquiring for the things he would be certain not to find at the places to which he was sent. One day a fellow came, as he had been directed, to Platt's store to buy a jewsharp. Platt was a merchant tailor. He was busy with a customer as the man appeared, but, observing that several of the 'boys' had dropped in at the door just to see what Platt would do, he 'caught on' at once, and responded to the inquiry for the musical instrument, 'W-w-wait a minute.' Having served his customer, he picked up a pair of glove stretchers and approached the rural melodist with, 'L-l-let me m-measure your m-m-mouth,' and, introducing the stretchers, manipulated them so as to transform the aperture into a horizontal yawn, awful to see, and capacious enough to hold a dozen jewsharps. Removing the apparatus, he examined it carefully and deliberately, as one might scrutinize a thermometer or a pocket compass, and then dismissed the unsuccessful hunter for jewsharps, as he said in a tone of well feigned disappointment: 'W-w-we hain't g-g-got any your s-size.'"—Exchange.

What Kept Lincoln Awake.

During the darkest days of the war there was a squabble in Syracuse over the appointment of a postmaster. Two factions had candidates, and each had sent to Washington numerously signed petitions for the appointment of its favorite. Finally, to get the matter settled, a delegation composed of the wealthiest men of the town and several of the most prominent ministers and lawyers, headed by Gen. Leavenworth, visited the national capital and secured an audience with President Lincoln. Gen. Leavenworth had carefully prepared his speech to Mr. Lincoln, and it ran something like this:

"MR. PRESIDENT: It is with great reluctance that we intrude upon you this morning. We appreciate the awful responsibilities and perplexities of your position, and do not forget that the very life of the nation is in your hands. But, Mr. President, the people of the great loyal north are at your back, and they are praying, sir, that your life may be spared and that you may be given strength to carry this war through to a successful issue."

Mr. Lincoln listened to Gen. Leavenworth with some impatience until he reached this point, and then interrupted him with:

"I assure you, my dear sir, that it isn't the war or the arms that is worrying the life out of me; it is that Syracuse postoffice that is keeping me awake nights."

Gen. Leavenworth did not finish his speech. The delegation presented their case in the briefest manner, and felt more comfortable when they reached Pennsylvania avenue than they did in the presence of the president.—Philadelphia Press.

Sturdy John Marshall.

The descendants of Chief Justice John Marshall are a sturdy race. One of them, bearing the great jurist's name, owns a farm in Virginia and runs a saw mill thereon. He got down in the buzz saw pit not along ago to fix a loose screw. Suddenly he felt something moving behind him, and he threw his arm up and felt the saw cut right through about the elbow, almost from skin to skin. Raising his head he struck the saw, which cut a groove right through his hair, over his forehead, and face and down into his throat. When he was taken out his face was one mass of bleeding flesh. They laid him on the grass and brought a surgeon. While the latter was running across the fields to the spot where the men had left Marshall he heard his voice saying, as well as his wounds would permit: "Shove this stuff away from my eye so that I can see whether it's hurt." They did "shove the stuff" away from his eye as carefully as possible, and he gave them one ghastly glance and then murmured: "It's all right; I can see." It took the surgeon an hour and a half to dress all his wounds. He endured the pain with perfect composure. Within a month he was out again as well as ever. Some one was telling one of the old darkies on the place, while "Marster John" was still in bed, what a narrow escape he had had from death. "Huh!" said the darky, "take heap more than that to kill Marse John. Why, if you wanted to kill Marse John you'd have to cut his head off—and then hide the head."—Chicago Herald.

—In Silesia, recently, a man was summoned before the magistrate for disturbing the slumbers of a citizen. The noise which disturbed his slumbers was the crowing of a cockerel. The wise magistrate decided that the man had a right to keep his cockerel, that a cockerel could not live without crowing, and the complainant was challenged to produce a cockerel which did not crow. The case was dismissed.

—In a work published in Germany by two experienced seedsmen, eight years is given as the limit of the vitality of most seeds; and it is said that, as a rule, the seeds which, when planted, germinate most quickly, are those which keep longest. According to the same book, rhubarb is unknown as a food plant in many parts of the German Empire.—N. Y. Ledger.

READ THE DEATH ROLL

Which the bills of mortality of any large city may be fitly designated, and you will find that renal and vesical maladies, that is to say, those that effect the kidney or bladder, have a remarkable prominence—we had almost said—preponderance. Bright's disease and diabetes in the chronic stage are rarely cured, and gravel, catarrh of the bladder and enuresis slay many. Yet at the outset, when the trouble merely amounts to inactivity of the organs involved, the danger may be nullified by that pleasant renal tonic and diuretic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which imparts the requisite amount of tone to the organs, without over-exciting them, and the use of which is convenient, and involves no elaborate preparation. Dyspepsia, a usual concomitant of renal complaints, and debility, which they invariably produce, are remedied by it. So also are constipation, malarial, rheumatic and nervous ailments.

CATARRH.

A New Home Treatment for the Cure Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness and Hay Fever.

The microscope has proved that these diseases are contagious, and that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the upper air passages and eustachian tubes. The eminent scientists, Tyndall, Huxley and Beale endorse this, and these authorities cannot be disputed. The regular method of treating these diseases has been to apply an irritant remedy weekly and even daily, thus keeping the delicate membrane in a constant state of irritation, allowing it no chance to heal, and as a natural consequence of such treatment not one permanent cure has ever been recorded. It is an absolute fact that these diseases cannot be cured by any application made oftener than once in two weeks, for the membrane must get a chance to heal before an application is repeated. It is now seven years since Mr. Dixon discovered the parasite in catarrh and formulated his new treatment, and since then his remedy has become a household word in every country where the English language is spoken. Cures effected by him seven years ago are cures still there having been no return of the disease.

So highly are these remedies valued that ignorant imitators have started up everywhere pretending to destroy a parasite of which they know nothing, by remedies, the results of the application of which they are equally ignorant. Mr. Dixon's remedy is applied only once in two weeks, and from one to three applications effect a permanent cure in the most aggravated cases.

Mr. Dixon sends a pamphlet describing his new treatment on the receipt of stamp to pay postage. The address is A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 King street west, Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

WHAT SENATOR NELSON THINKS OF ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS.

SENATE CHAMBER, ALBANY, N. Y., April 4, 1885.

On the 27th of February, 1883, I was taken with a violent pain in the region of the kidneys. I suffered such agony that I could hardly stand up. As soon as possible I applied two ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS, one over each kidney, and laid down. In an hour, to my surprise and delight, the pain had vanished and I was well. I wore the plasters for a day or two as a precaution, and then removed them. I have been using ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS in my family for the last ten years, and have always found them the quickest and best external remedy for colds, strains and rheumatic affections. From my experience I believe they are the best plasters in the world.

"THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE." Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, and vital strength, will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. PIERCE thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

PRESIDENT SADI-CARNOT.

Short Biographical Sketch of the New Chief Executive of France.

Marie Francois Sadi-Carnot completed half a century of life August 11, 1887. His grandfather was the famous Minister of War in the French revolution. His father, M. Lazare Hippolyte Carnot, inherited much of the celebrated Carnot's ability, and as a politician participated prominently in many of the stirring episodes which marked the history of France in the second and third quarters of the present century. But the second Carnot was a paradoxical combination—advocate, statesman, orator, author, man of affairs and mystic philosopher. He identified himself with the St. Simonians of 1832 and became a profound student of Oriental literature when Enfantin, Roge and Massol went to preach the doctrines of Saint Simon in the East. To this time of mysticism is due the "Sadi" which is hyphenated to the historic name of Carnot, borne by the fourth President of the Third Republic.

Sadi-Carnot was educated to the profession of engineer and proved an apt scholar, even if developing none of the active characteristics of his family, and manifesting rather stolidity which was foreign to his house. He was fifth in his class when he entered the Polytechnic School, but soon took the first position and retained it until he graduated in 1863. He was soon afterwards appointed assistant secretary of the Government Council of Roads and Bridges. Subsequently he was nominated engineer at Annecy, in Upper Savoy, and remained there until 1871, when, at the fall of the empire, he was summoned to active political life. January 10, 1871, he was appointed Prefect of the Department of the Seine-Inferieure, and was charged with the organization of the national defense in the three departments of the Seine-Inferieure, the Eure and Calvados. That duty was performed with the enthusiasm and thoroughness which was expected from one on whom devolved the task of upholding the traditions of the Carnots.

In February of the same year M. Sadi-Carnot was elected to the National Assembly from the department of the Cote d'Or and identified himself with the Republican Left, of which he became secretary. Naturally he gave the most earnest support to all laws for the permanent establishment of the Republic. When the Assembly was divided into two branches, in 1876, he was elected deputy from Beaune and was appointed one of the secretaries of the chamber. He made a specialty of public works, more particularly railroads, and the promotion of inland navigation, and soon gained a reputation as an authority on these subjects. He was frequently placed on the Budget Committee, the training school for young statesmen, and became chairman in 1883.

In December, 1878, he was appointed under secretary of public works, and there gained the intimate acquaintance with the operations of the department which qualified him for the Minister's portfolio, which Ferry gave him on becoming Premier in September, 1880. Gambetta overthrew the Cabinet in November, 1881, and was called to form a ministry, and Sadi-Carnot retired. Brisson gave him the portfolio of public works in April, 1885, and when DeFreycinet succeeded Brisson as Premier in January, 1886, he retained him in the Cabinet as Minister of Finance. When in December last the DeFreycinet ministry fell, the question at issue was one of economy and the Minister of Finance refused to conform to large reductions in expenditures demanded by the Budget Committee. Clemenceau then overthrew DeFreycinet on a vote to sustain Sadi-Carnot's estimates. This is the complete record of the new President's comparatively brief political experience.

Madame Sadi-Carnot, a daughter of the late Dupont White, is well and favorably known to English and Americans. She is a pretty, bright, clever woman, Parisian in her vivacity and never-failing good humor and a most interesting conversationalist. To her possibly as much as to himself does her husband owe his political preferment. She talks English with ease and grace and reads all the sensational novels published in London with the same avidity as an English-speaking person reads the similar class of French literature. Ouida, Miss Braddon and Wilkie Collins are her particular favorites. She will prove a greater favorite in the Elysee Palace than any lady who has been its mistress during the fifteen years' existence of the Third Republic.—Philadelphia Press.

Working on a Sewer.

"It was a bad day to work on a sewer, so I knocked off the men," remarked a prominent sewer contractor one evening last week. "What class of your men are the best workers?" asked the Expressionist. "Well, I've in my employ Irishmen, Germans, Frenchmen, Prussians, Poles, Italians and Americans. The Italian will work well and do a good day's work if you can stand over him and always be where he can see you. Poles are good workers, don't need so much watching as Italians, but they can't do so much work. It takes much longer, too, to make Poles understand what you want and how to do their work. The best workers, I find, are Germans. They will work right along and I can be gone half a day. When I get back I find their work done. An Irishman is a good worker—when he wants to work—but he's worst of all. If he makes up his mind to 'soldier' he'll do it right in front of you, and laugh if you kick."—Buffalo Express.

RACES OF DWARFS.

Notes and Comments on the Subject by A. De Quatrefages.

A. De Quatrefages has recently published an historical review of the ancient and modern reports on dwarfish tribes. While formerly the description of ancient geographers were considered not trustworthy, many of them have been confirmed by recent explorations. Among these are the tales of the pygmies. Aristotle and Pliny state that a dwarfish people lived near the swamps of the upper part of the Nile. De Quatrefages considers this tribe identical with Schweinfurth's Akka, who at the present time live a little further south. Pomponius Mela mentions dwarfs who inhabited the neighborhood of the Red Sea. This report was confirmed by Leon des Avancher's discovery of the dwarfish Wa Berikomo, who are said to be only four and one-half feet high, and by D'Abbadie's visit to the Maze Mollea, who live a little further to the north.

Herodotus tells of a dwarfish black people on the banks of the Niger. His description of the land still holds good; but, instead of negroes, Berbers and Tuareg inhabit those regions. At the present time the most northern place in West Africa which is inhabited by dwarfs is Tenda Maje, where they were met with by Mollien in 1818.

Pliny mentions, besides the dwarfs on the sources of the Nile, others living in what is now southeastern Belutchistan, where the Brahui, a people of Dravida lineage, are found. Ktesias speaks of pygmies who inhabited Central India. Mr. Rousselet found in that region the dwarfish Bandra Lok, who live in the Vindhias Mountains.

De Quatrefages considers all Asiastic dwarfish tribes as one group, which he calls Negrito, while the African ones are called Negrillo. His researches lead him to the conclusion that the traces of this race are found from India to the eastern extremity of New Guinea, and from Ceylon throughout India, Farther Inia, the Philippines to Japan. In most regions they are mixed with other races. He considers the Dravida one of the most characteristic results of this mixture. It is only on the Andaman Islands and a few other isolated points that the pure race is still in existence. The author shows that individuals of Negrito type occur among the Pariahs of India, and that isolated communities in many parts of southeastern Asia have retained the anthropological character of this dwarfish race.

De Quatrefages considers the Negrito of all these widely separated regions one race, which originated in southern Asia. When the yellow race migrated southward and the white race eastward, they were compelled to take refuge on the islands and to migrate to more southerly countries. Thus they populated the Eastern Archipelago and crossed to Africa.—Science.

CANCEROUS GROWTHS.

Symptoms of the Principal Varieties of Cancer of the Throat.

There are four recognized varieties of cancer—epithelioma, encephaloid (like brain substance), colloid (like glue), and scirrhus, the two first named being the only ones found in this location, and they are mostly of the epithelioma variety. Mackenzie found only six encephaloid growths out of fifty-three cases of cancer and Ziemssen only nine out of sixty-six.

The symptoms of both varieties, except as they appear when viewed by means of a laryngoscope, are the same. The first sign of disease noticed is usually huskiness or weakening of the voice. At first this is transient, but it finally becomes permanent. It has been noticed as long as three years before the more serious symptoms developed. The voice is never entirely lost, as it is in tuberculosis of the larynx, and the patient by a violent effort can make himself heard, even in the advanced stages of the disease. The hoarseness depends, early in the affection, upon an implification of one of the nerves concerned in the management of the vocal cords. At a late period it is due to ulceration and the presence of so-called "buds and vegetation" upon the inside of the organ. The breathing gradually and surely becomes embarrassed. This is due to the increasing size of this growth, and to the occurrence of oedema under the mucous membrane, which still further narrows the breathing space. At first there is difficult breathing on exertion only, then there comes a time when it is a labor to breathe at all, and the face becomes more or less blue from defective aeration of the blood. Attacks of spasm of the glottis and of suffocation are apt to come on, especially at night. The voice and breathing may be improved greatly (unfortunately this is only temporary) by extraction of portions of the growth. The act of swallowing becomes interfered with earlier or later, according to the size and location of the growth. If it begin high up, the interference is early; if it begin in the vocal cords or below them, it is long before swallowing becomes difficult or out of the question. As ulceration progresses, swallowing becomes more difficult, both from obstruction and from pain, and pieces of food are liable to be thrown into the air passages. In this way a fatal result may be brought about. Pressure over the larynx usually produces pain at an early period of the disease. This is at first of a dull, aching character, afterwards it is sharp, cutting and constantly present. When the gullet is early involved, the pain is much more intense and serious.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE LITTLE PEOPLE.

A 5-year-old Who Wanted to Retain Her Health.

A Dexter 5-year-old was put to bed the other night a little earlier than she herself thought desirable. Soon after she called for some bread and milk, and got it. After eating a few spoonfuls she looked up to her father with a most unconcerned air and remarked: "Papa, I believe I've heard you say it wasn't a good plan to retire immediately after eating. I guess I'll get up."—Dexter (Me.) Gazette.

A specimen of Katie's faith in the efficacy of prayer shows that she believes in faith with works. She and a little companion had got locked into the bathroom, and after long and fruitless efforts to unlock the door, Katie proposed a prayer for deliverance, which she immediately began, but after first directing her little fellow captive to make, while the prayer was under way, a vigorous and industrious use of a screw driver, which they had got hold of. "The door come wite open," said Katie. "But why didn't you use the screw driver and let Mary do the praying?" "Cos she can't pray 's well 's I can—and she can use screw drivers."—Hartford Times.

Wanted It Changed.

Ethel and Maud were taken in by the nurse for their first glimpse of a little baby brother, whose age was numbered by hours. Ethel did not seem at all pleased, and in answer to a question she replied, with no little disdain: "No, I don't like it. I would'nt have such a red faced baby. If I was mother I would send it back and change it." She knew that her mother, when dissatisfied with some purchase, frequently returned it to the store and exchanged it for something more to her taste.—New York World.

A Comforting Reflection.

One day Gracie and auntie were speaking of an uncle who had died before Gracie was born. "Uncle John loved little children dearly," said auntie. "If he were alive he would be very kind to you. He would give you ever so many presents." "Well, never mind, auntie, if he is dead I shall see him when I get to heaven. We've got him saved up down in the cemetery, haven't we?"—Boston Globe.

The Artless Child.

Mamie (6 years old, to lady caller)—Mamma said to ask you to sit down a few moments, and she would be right in. It isn't raining, is it?"

Lady Caller—Why, no, Mamie. Why did you think it was?"

Mamie—Because, when mamma saw you coming, she said, "it never rains but it pours."—Texas Siftings.

Just Before Christmas.

Little Gertrude, a fat, grave personage of two years and a half, had given her mother a hug of unusual fervor. Said the latter: "What makes you love mamma so today, Gertrude?" "Well, mamma, I must make myself agreeable."—Beatrice (Neb.) Woman's Journal.

He Got Away With Too Many.

A short old man in rather rusty attire, with a long gray beard yellow in streaks and an armful of Christmas bundles, wandered through Fulton market on Thursday afternoon and stopped at a wagon where baskets of grapes were displayed for sale.

"Here you are!" yelled the proprietor, pointing to open baskets of fruit; "the best Concords, Catawbas and Delawares in the market, for half the price you pay inside."

The small man stepped up, and shifting his bundles so as to free his turkey arm he meditatively pulled off a large grape from a bunch in a basket of Concords. Having devoured that, he tried a Delaware and then a Catawba, and began on the Concords again.

The fruit vender, who had been engaged with a customer, now began to regard the short man's actions with suspicion.

"How much for grapes?" said the latter, laconically, eating a Delaware.

"Forty cents a basket."

"Too much," said the short man, stowing away two more Concords.

"Are you a wholesaler?" inquired the vender.

"No."

"Own a vineyard, perhaps, and make wine?"

"No."

"Where did you learn to eat grapes?"

"Over'n Jersey."

"Well, see here, old man, I reckon you've eat about a pound and you fork over nine cents, or I'll tie that beard of yourn into a bow knot, and then you caper back to Jersey; we don't want no grape insect rava'n' around here."—New York Tribune.

To Set the Ball Rolling.

Hostess—My dear Miss Howler, won't you sing something for us? I'm afraid people are finding things awfully dull.

Miss Howler—Really, Mrs. Brown, I'm afraid you must excuse me. I'm awfully hoarse to-night.

Hostess—Oh, my dear, that won't make the slightest difference. Nobody will listen, for they'll all begin to talk directly you begin to sing, and I just want something to start the conversation.—Boston Beacon.

The Return of Piety.

"You were once a member of our church, I believe."

"Yes."

"Why do you not go attend?"

"Oh, I have a number of reasons."

"By the way, I don't lead the choir any more. I've lost my voice completely."

"Is that so? Well, I think I'll renew my attendance at the church at once."—Lincoln Journal.

How to Get a Crowded House.

First Actor—I am going to have my benefit next Saturday night.

Second Actor—You are?

"Yes, but I'm puzzled to know how I'm going to fill the house."

"That's easy enough done."

"But how?"

"Invite your creditors."—Texas Siftings.

IN A SWARM OF BEES.

An Explorer's Painful Encounter With a Persistent Enemy.

Schweinfurth gives the following description of a painful encounter which he and his men once had on the White Nile with some very small but powerful enemies. The boat was being towed by the crew. As the rope was drawn along through the grass on the banks, it happened that it disturbed a swarm of bees. In a moment, like a great cloud, they burst upon the men who were dragging; every one of them threw himself headlong into the water, and hurried to regain the boat. The swarm followed at their heels, and in a few seconds filled every nook and cranny of the deck. What a scene of confusion ensued may readily be imagined.

Without any foreboding of ill, I was arranging my plants in my cabin, when I heard all around me a scampering, which I took at first to be merely the frolics of my people. I called out to inquire the meaning of the noise but only got excited gestures and reproachful looks in answer. The cry of "Bees! bees!" soon broke upon my ear, and I proceeded to light a pipe. My attempt was entirely in vain; in an instant bees in thousands are about me, and I am mercilessly stung all over my face and hands. To no purpose do I try to protect my face with a handkerchief, and the more violently I fling my hands about, so much the more violent becomes the impetuosity of the irritated insects. The maddening pain is now on my cheek, now in my eye, now in my hair. The dogs from under my bed burst out frantically, overturning every thing in their way.

Losing well nigh all control over myself, I fling myself in despair into the river; I dive down, but all in vain, for the stings rain down still upon my head. Not heeding the warnings of my people, I creep through the reedy grass to the swampy bank. The grass lacerates my hands, and I try to gain the mainland, hoping to find shelter in the woods. All at once four powerful arms seize me, and drag me back with such force that I think I must be choked in the mud. I am compelled to go back on board, and flight is not to be thought of.

In the cooling moisture I had so far recovered my self-possession that it occurred to me to drag out a sheet in which to envelope myself, and this measure at last gave me some protection, but I had first gradually to crush the bees which I had inclosed with me within the covering. Covering down convulsively, I lingered out thus three full hours, whilst the buzzing continued uninterruptedly, and solitary stings penetrated periodically through the linen.

Meantime, by great self-denial and courage on the part of my people, my large dog was brought on board to me, and covered with cloths; the other was unfortunately lost; in all likelihood was stung to death. By degrees every one became equally passive as myself; at length perfect silence reigned on board; the bees subsided into quietness. That evening, and for the next few days, I felt ready for an encounter with half a score of buffaloes, or a brace of lions, rather than have any thing more to do with bees, and this was a sentiment in which all the ship's company heartily concurred.—Youth's Companion.

PAYING BY THE MILE.

A Magazine Editor's Novel Bargain with a Young Contributor.

"How much do you pay for such a story?" asked a young writer of a well-known magazine editor in New York, the other day.

"Let me see your manuscript."

The young man produced his roll and submitted it to the editor.

"You write a rather fine hand, and therefore I will give you twenty-five dollars for every quarter of a mile of writing that I accept."

"Twenty-five dollars for a quarter of of a mile?" repeated the would-be contributor, aghast with surprise.

"Yes, and that is a very good rate for an unknown writer like yourself. We pay all the way from $100 to $1,000 a mile for the work of the most noted writers, and I have paid a famous poet at the rate of $10,000 a mile for a great poem which he wrote at my order. That is an exceptionally high price, though."

"How much would a mile make of my manuscript?"

"I should say about ten thousand words."

"You don't mean to say that ten thousand of my words if strung in a row would make a mile?"

"Most assuredly not. But in writing ten thousand words your pen moves over a mile of space. With some writers a mile is only composed of eight thousand words, and there are some microscopic writers who crowd twenty thousand words into a mile. Those figures will give you an idea of the amount of territory the pen of a busy writer will cover in a year. Take a newspaper reporter, who writes on an average ten thousand words a week. His pen will travel fifty-two miles a year. A court stenographer, who frequently takes down forty thousand to sixty thousand words in a day, and transcribes part of his notes at night, will cover not less than four hundred miles a year. Take Alexander Dumas, the elder, who was one of the most prolific writers in the world. If he had done all of his own writing, he would have averaged five miles a day during his whole busy career. He often employed secretaries, however, though he did a large part of his work himself. You see it would take a long time for a man to draw a line around the world with his pen. It could be done, though."—Chicago Times.

ARTIFICIAL EYES.

An Optician Tells Where They Are Made and What They Are Worth.

One-eyed people who can afford it have two glass eyes, one for day, the other for evening use. The reason for this is that the pupil of the eye is smaller in the day time than at night, and hence the two glass eyes are of different sizes, so as to correspond with the natural eye. The price of glass eyes is becoming cheaper on account of competition, and at the same time the quality is better. A common glass eye may be had for ten dollars, but they are not good deceptions and do not last long. A first-class eye costs fifty dollars, or even more. The best will not last over two years, because the secretions in the hollow of the eye roughen the glass by chemical action, and this roughness irritates the flesh. A glass eye, like false teeth, is taken out at night, for it would not be safe to go to sleep with it in the cavity. It might drop out, and the slightest fall would break it. If a person could buy glass eyes at wholesale, by the gross, he could get them for about two dollars apiece. But he would have to look over a great many before finding one to fit and to match his other eye in size, color and expression. Glass eyes are all made abroad, principally in Germany and France, no factory having been started here, although there is a great demand for them in this country. A glass eye is not made after the shape of a natural eye, because when the latter is taken from the cavity the tissues just back of it pushes forward and leaves but little space. The false eye is therefore elliptical in shape. The outer side preserves the natural form, but the inner side is near flat, with rounded edges. It is slightly larger that the natural eye, so that when inserted in the cavity it may not slip out. At first it irritates the eyelids and the tissues back of the cavity, but the wearer grows accustomed to it, and finds it a rest and a protection. A skillful oculist can put a glass into the cavity so that very close observation is necessary to detect it. Not only are the size and color of the natural eye counterfeited, but even the general expression. The oculist has yet to discover means of giving that sympathetic movement which distinguishes a pair of eyes. There is quite a large number of people with glass eyes, say one in four hundred. You would not know it by casual observation, for the wearer of a glass eye is so sensitive on the subject that he is careful of its actions in public, and he becomes so accustomed to the glass orb that he can prevent all but intimate friends from discovering his defect. Science has done better by him than by the man with the wooden limb.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

AN INDIAN SYBARITE.

Life of the King of Oudh Amid the Surroundings of Eden.

The death of the last King of Oudh deprives Calcutta of a picturesque and almost legendary personage. To the visitor the red and blue roof of his palace, the gardens, stocked with wild beasts and brilliant birds, his innumerable guards and attendants and the tens of thousands of pigeons that were always wheeling above the grounds seemed to embody the fantastic life of native India. The men guarding the doors were all his own sepoys from Cawnpore, and once you had an order to penetrate the charmed circle you passed through a beautiful succession of groves and parterres and miniature grassplots and pleasant terraces. His menagerie fell away of late, but some years back it almost rivaled the famous collection in the London Zoo. In one large space there were buffaloes, goats and deer and ostriches and other great birds. A tank something like one hundred and fifty yards square was covered with storks and pelicans and swans, and had ample well-wooded rambling grounds around it. The smaller birds were sheltered in lofty aviaries. The lions and tigers and wolves and other ferocious animals were, of course, caged, but caged very comfortably.

In another garden a building that looked like a magnificent ant hill was fixed in the center of a large square well, and was carefully surrounded with water. Here the snakes were segregated, and five hundred of them lived in the narrow holes with which the strange building was artificially honeycombed. It used to be one of the great sights of the day to see them fed with frogs. But his pigeons formed the great feature of the King's collection.

"One who knew him" writes that he led a kingly life to the end, though he had not more than seven thousand subjects to govern: "He held court and received regal honors, created titled nobles according to his caprice and traveled over his grounds in a campan, occupying at different times different country seats, like other Kings." At one time he would watch his animals and his fishes being fed, at another his rams and cocks, and quails, would be brought up to fight before him. He had, we are told, a prevailing passion for order and cleanliness. He prayed five times a day, though he ate only one meal, but from morning till night he chewed pan sopari and smoked the hookah.—Times of India.

—The latest discovery is a seven-inch vein of leather polish or shoe-blacking on the farm of M. H. Gladman, just west of Hopkins, Mo. It is found four feet from the surface, and when wet and rubbed on a pair of shoes or leather makes a splendid polish. The find is a curiosity. Nodaway county has most all the good things of this world, and now can boast of a shoe-blacking mine—the only one in the world.

OF THE RIGHT STUFF.

Qualifying For the Honorable Position of Base-Ball Umpire.

A wiry looking man with a set expression of countenance walked up to a hackman in front of LaFayette Square in Buffalo, early the other morning and asked:

"You can call a fellow some pretty hard names, can't you?"

"Sometimes."

"Swear some, I s'pose?"

"Yes. Once in a while I swear," replied the hackman, wondering if he had been struck by a Salvation Army recruit.

"Get smoking, howling, tearing mad, rip people up the back, and make it red hot, all around your neighborhood, sometimes, don't you?"

"Well, I can make it pretty uncomfortable for people when they don't pay for this hack. I'm a terror to snakes when they come my way."

"Yes, that's what I thought. Start in on me."

"What do you mean? You don't owe me any thing."

"No matter, go for me."

"What shall I say?"

"Call me any thing; call me a liar."

"You're a liar."

"That's right; go on."

"You're a double-barreled liar."

"Good. Go right on."

"You're an eighteen-karat stem-winding, self-cocking prevaricator."

"Splendid. Keep it up."

"You're a mule-eared, dog-faced, squash-headed lying whelp of humanity."

"Tell me I don't know any thing."

"You're a fool."

"Make it stronger."

"You're a pimply, blubbering idiot."

"Come again."

"You're a crooked necked, wall-eyed knock-kneed imbecile."

"Now kick me," said the determined man.

"What for?" queried the astonished hackman.

"No matter, kick me. I'll pay you for it."

The hackman kicked him.

"Now grab me by the hair and drag me around four or five blocks."

The hackman did so.

"Now rub my nose in the dirt, tear my coat, jump on me and throw me over that fence will you?"

His instructions having been carried out, the set-looking man slowly dragged himself to his feet and wiping the blood off his face, and spitting the dirt out of his mouth, gasped: "Is that the best you can do?"

"I never treated a man worse in my life," said the hackman, "I couldn't. But who in the dickens are you anyway, and what does all this mean?"

"Well, you see," said the set-looking man, handing the hackman a dollar for his trouble, "I have just been offered a position as base-ball umpire for the coming season, and thought before accepting it I would like to see if I had the stuff in me to hold the job. I guess perhaps I'll do." And the set-looking man limped slowly away just as a policeman, who had been interviewing a peanut stand around the corner, came along and wanted to know what all that row was about.—Drift.

INSURING WINDOWS.

Companies Called Into Life by the Meanness of Human Nature.

Kicking out a valuable pane of plate-glass to spite the owner of the premises is about as honorable a way to take revenge as whipping the little sister of a big boy who has "licked" you. And yet instances are of almost daily occurrence. Frequent breakage through cussedness, carelessness or accident many years ago suggested the organization of insurance companies to take exclusively this class of risks. England was their birthplace, and they emigrated to this country about fifteen years ago. There are now three companies doing business in this line in Chicago. None of these will touch fire risks, but all insure against any kind of loss which fire policies do not cover. Their plan is to take the importers' lists of prices, deduct 25 per cent. and charge 3 per cent. per annum on the remainder. When there is a loss they pay no money, but replace the broken glass at their own expense. On panes that are worth $500 or more they charge 5 per cent. gross, taking nothing off, because they are much more liable to breakage.

The charge on mirrors is from 3 to 10 per cent., according to size. The risks are considered extra hazardous because they are largely in saloons. In case of breakage they are replaced. This plan gives better satisfaction to both parties. In this city policies are outstanding to the extent of more than $1,500,000, but it is estimated that not more than one-fourth of the mirrors and plate glass are insured. The companies have an arrangement with the glass dealers and importers by which they get glass at a low figure; but even with this advantage they could not exist but for the salvage. A mirror worth, say, $200 may have a corner broken. It can be cut down in size and reframed at a loss of not more than 25 per cent., and becomes the property of the insuring company. A fair estimate of the yearly losses in Chicago places them at 1,000, a majority being the result of pure meanness.—Chicago Tribune.

—Counsel (to witness, the father of a family)—"Why are you so certain, Mr. Smith, that the event occurred on such a date? May you not be mistaken?" Witness—"Impossible, sir. It was the day I didn't have to buy any of my children a pair of shoes."—N. Y. Sun.

GIGANTIC REPTILES.

Peculiarities of the Varieties Found in the East Indian Country.

In an article by Rev. J. E. Tenison-Woods on the snakes of the Indian archipelago, he observes that the cobra never exceeds the length of about fifteen feet, and that a larger snake with which it is often confused is a different species, called Hamadryas ophiophagus. The hamadryas, which resemble the cobra in having a hood or dilatable neck, attains the length of fifteen feet, and feeds chiefly upon lizards and snakes. It is arborial in its habits, but shows a great partiality for water, to which it will readily take. It is very fierce, and is ready, not only to attack, but to pursue human beings. Its venom is nearly as deadly in its effect as that of the cobra. Mr. Tenison-Woods has heard of many instances of its ferocious character—that is to say, of its turning on those who attacked it, and showing fight. At a picnic party (he says) some officers of the Twenty-seventh regiment gave chase to a large hamadryad; but they had not gone very far when it turned on its pursuers and quickly scattered them. It then took to the water, where it was followed by two of the party in a boat; but it soon tried the effect of boarding, and made the rowers exert their powers to get away. Mr. Tenison-Woods makes mention of sea-snakes as being wonderfully numerous in all the seas of India and China. It is difficult, he says, to exaggerate the numbers one sees on the surface of the water on a calm day. "When off the coast of Borneo in her Majesty's ship Pegasus we had some very fine calm days, when the sea was like glass or oil. On every side we were surrounded by specimens of these reptiles between two and three feet long. I have seen the same thing on many different calm days; in fact, I don't know any place where they seem more numerous than the Bornean coasts. I frequently saw nearly as large an assemblage in the Philippine seas. I should say that bathing was a perilous business in these localities, for the serpents are very venomous, and there are many authentic records of disastrous results from their bites."

Mention is then made of the Python reticulatus, or boa. This species is said to be very numerous, and has a disagreeable habit of coming to live in the thatch of houses, emerging at night to take its prey, in pursuit of which it is not particular whether this is some of the rats and mice of the house or the chickens and fowls of the poultry-yard. Mr. Tenison-Woods proceeds: "Recent writers have described the fear which the natives have of this reptile on account of its sometimes attacking man. This I can not believe, and wherever I have been in the Malay peninsula, Java, Celebes and the Moluccas, I have never found the natives much afraid of them. As to their swallowing a man, or even a large child, the idea is too preposterous to be seriously entertained. Neither do I believe that its muscular strength is so great as generally believed, though no doubt its crushing power is considerable. There was an instance of this in the Raffles Museum at Singapore. A large living python was kept in the show-cases of that museum. It made its escape and was found on the floor by the attendant in the morning. He tried to put it back into the case, and a long struggle ensued. The serpent wound itself round the man's body and tried to crush him; but the man's strength enabled him to unwind the coils with much effort and make his escape. I think he said that the length of the snake was about eighteen feet. If its strength was of the usual kind it will be hard to believe those stories of its prodigous crushing power. Among many specimens brought to me at Perak, the largest I met with was twenty feet long. It had been captured with scarcely any violence, so that as a specimen it was in beautiful preservation and full vigor. The Malays brought it up to me in an excited and livid state, dragging it along by a small bamboo loop fastened behind its head. The creature was active, and constantly getting more of its head through the loop than was safe for the man who held him. Whilst I was making a bargain with the captors, it writhed far out of the loop and savagely bit one of the Malays on the calf of the leg. As its teeth are all recurved, they could not be immediately disengaged, and so the Malays, excited by their comrades cries, fell upon it with their long knives and hacked it to pieces. The head of this serpent, though the reptile was of such great length, was not as big as a man's hand. The result of my inquiries leads me to believe that pythons invariably fly from the face of man, and are formidable to no larger animal than the deer and small wild boar of the jungle."—St. James' Gazette.

It Brought the Ice.

"Confound it all," said machinist Makepenny, "the steam pipes in the office are all frozen up! Confound the cold weather, and that office boy, too. Between them both, they'll break me!"

"I's all your fault, anyway," said the office boy.

"All my fault, is it? Why, confound it all, you young pie-eating rascal, what do you mean, anyway?"

"Why," said the boy, looking wildly toward the door, "you wanted some ice yesterday, and told me to hang the ice card in the window, and there it is now."

"What's that got to do about it?"

"Lots, you bet! You've got all the ice you want, haven't you?"

"I haven't seen it. Where?"

"In the pipes, of couse!"—Tableau!—Boston Budget.

TAKE
LIVER REGULATOR
For all Diseases of the
Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Spleen.

This purely vegetable preparation, now so celebrated as a Family Medicine, originated in the South in 1828. It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid instead of weakening the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. ### MARRIED.

MACK—MULHOLLAND—At the residence of the bride's parents, at Independence, February 29, 1888, by Hon. John A. Hannah, Superior Judge, Mr. P. H. Mack and Miss Katie E. Mulholland.

[illegible] selling at $18 a ton in Virginia City.

[illegible] of school land in Owens valley.

The Democratic National Convention will be held at St. Louis on June 5th.

All over the State the demand for young fruit trees to plant exceeds the supply.

Mr. J. W. McIlhurry and Mr. Henry Grover, of Big Pine, were in town on Wednesday.

Miss May Shepherd has been quite ill during the past week; Dr. Woodin has been in attendance.

Large quantities of vine cuttings are being rooted for setting out along the line of the Eastside canal.

San Diego papers report a great many men there out of employment. There are many carpenters among them.

The Crocker Brothers have a little army of Indians at work grubbing willows; they will clear a large tract this spring.

A new Sunday school has been opened at Big Pine. There are enough young people there to make a prosperous school.

Rev. T. F. Sisson will preach at the M. E. Church at seven o'clock Sunday evening. Praise service fifteen minutes before.

[illegible] of Supervisors of Inyo county [illegible] special session on Wednesday [illegible] for the purpose of appointing [illegible] officer.

[illegible] for holding Sunday school at the M. E. Church has been changed from [illegible] p. m. to eleven o'clock a. m. [illegible] welcome.

[illegible] Keyes and C. Walter came down [illegible] the White Hill on Wednesday to make [illegible] for packing out a lot of ore they have ready sacked.

It is reported that the mill at Grantsville, Nevada, will be started up to run on ore from mines in Shamrock Canyon. The mill has been idle a long time.

Some very fine ore has recently been taken out in the Deep Spring country. The ore is rich in silver and will run up into the hundreds of dollars per ton.

At Candelaria Dickey Davy, Owens Jones and James McKee are reported down with small-pox. Davy is expected to die; there are several more cases in the town.

A movement has been started to secure the holding of the Democratic State Convention at Fresno. The understanding is that everything shall be free to the delegates.

Mr. James Jones, of Big Pine, has purchased the farm of J. H. Muller, about six miles north of Big Pine. It is a good farm containing about 480 acres of excellent land with an abundance of water.

There is much demand for the service of Mr. Enos' standard trotting horse Albenton. Already engagements are made for about all that can be attended to for the season. The fine draft stallion owned by Mr. Enos is also in demand.

Rev. Warren Nims is reported to be dying at Loyalton, Sierra county. A chronic sore on his facehas developed into a cancer. Mr. Nims was stationed at Independence three years ago; he is one of the purest and best men that ever lived.

One of the objections raised by several Democrats in the East to holding their National Convention on the Pacific Coast was that the location is so desirable, and so many would be anxious to go, that it would increase the bitterness of the struggle in the various State Conventions for the election of delegates.

Last Monday being the day for offering at public sale all property on which taxes were delinquent the Sheriff went through the usual form. No property was sold, as no one appeared to bid on anything. In fact nearly all the delinquent taxes had been already paid. Nearly all the non-resident locators of desert land have paid the taxes on their locations: this turned quite a nice sum into the treasury.

It is reported that there are several cases of small-pox at Candelaria. Not a day should be lost in having every child and even every grown person in Owens valley vaccinated. If it be true that small-pox is at Candelaria the infection is likely to reach us any day. Carelessness in the matter of vaccination may cost many a life. We will publish, free of cost, the name of any and every physician in the valley who has a supply of vaccine virus and is prepared to vaccinate.

There is no mistaking the signs of coming lively times for Inyo. All over Owens valley the work of improvement has fairly set in. This is more apparent by traveling over the valley; everywhere land is being cleared, plowed and planted, fences are being made and dwellings built. With about five hundred square miles of excellent land and not one-tenth of it under cultivation, there is ample room for vast increase in population and development of valuable property.

From Fish Spring toward Big Pine for a distance of about four miles several new dwellings have recently been put up. Nearly all of the land in that locality is now located and the locators are working hard on improvements. Clearing off sagebrush and plowing is going on all over that locality. The Big Pine ditch, begun over nine years ago but so long suffered to drag along slowly, and for years together nothing done upon it, will soon be finished and will then irrigate thousands of acres of as good land as in the valley.

Looking across the valley from near Big Pine it can be seen that Gustav Sanger is pushing ahead vigorously with work on the East side of the river. Hundreds of acres are already cleared of sagebrush and distributing ditches made so that the plain looks like a vas chequer board. A great deal of the cleared land is already planted with grain and alfalfa. It is very evident that Mr. Sanger will gather a big crop this season. Further up the river, at Warm Spring, Mr. A. O. Collins and his sons are also pushing along similar improvements.

Directors' Meeting.

Last Saturday the Board of Directors of Agricultural District No. 18 met at Independence. The following Directors were present: A. R. Conklin, President; Nathan Rhine, William Walker, W. S. Enos, W. K. Miller, Thomas J. Goodale and John Shepherd. The time for holding the next fair of the District was set for the week beginning September 17th. Several financial matters were satisfactorily arranged. The Association owns four and one-half acres of land within the limits of the town of Independence. This is all enclosed by a tight board fence seven feet high, and within this enclosure is a large and well constructed pavilion building. In addition to this is a fine mile track, with grand stand and judges stand, one half a mile south of the town limit. All this is valuable property and will speedily be more valuable. The encumbrance upon the property only amounts to $1904 and is all held by one member of the Association. Mr. T. J. Goodale, of Fish Spring, one of the Directors, very generously offered to give a large number of shade trees for setting out in the Association park at Independence. These trees are now being transplanted; they are already large, grow very rapidly, and in three or four years will make very fine shade. Other improvements will be added to the buildings and grounds as rapidly as possible.

Visitors

Last Saturday a party of visitors came to Independence by special train on the C & C. railroad. In the party were Hon. Evan Williams, of Empire, Nevada, E. J. Gorham, Robert Wood and W. S. James, of Gold Hill; J. W. Holbrook, C. H. Peters and A. C. Hofer, of Carson; J. P. Woodbury and C. Peterson, of Empire, and James Yerington, of Hawthorne. The party took carriages next day and drove to Big Pine. None of the gentlement except Mr. Williams had ever before been in Owens valley. Every one of the party said that Owens valley far exceeded their expectation in the character of the land, abundance of water and pleasant climate. They had not the least idea that a region so extensive and possessing so much and so rich natural advantages existed here. Every one of the party has already invested money here and is interested in the development of the country. The first thing that led any of these gentlemen to think of Owens valley was a display of fruits and other products made at Reno two years ago last fall. All of them expressed regret that they had not come here sooner. Any one who wants authentic information about Owens valley and can meet any of the gentlemen named should hasten to seek an interview.

A Successful Party.

The Leap Year party at Big Pine last Wednesday evening was a most gratifying success. The arrangements made by the ladies were just perfect and were well carried out in every particular. Gentlemen will do well to accept some hints from the ladies of Big Pine on the way to make such parties a success. As was to be expected, the attendance was very large. Dancing was kept up until near six o'clock on Thursday morning. From Independence quite a delegation attended; among others Mrs. W. Rhine and her son, Bertrand Rhine; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. P. Laird, Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Thurston, Mr. and Mrs. J. Roeper, Mrs. J. J. Moore and Mr. C. Thurston. The visitors give special thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Crocker, the new proprietors of the hotel at Big Pine. Much of the pleasure of the occasion was due to their kindness and attention. It was not alone that every delicacy in the way of cooking that could be had was prepared in abundance, but the warm welcome and evident desire to be friendly and kind that so much pleased the visitors. We congratulate the ladies of Big Pine upon the success of their party; had it not been for a previous engagement several more would have attended from Independence.

Artesian Well Boring and Desert Land.

During the past two years thousands of acres of land in Owens valley were located under the Desert Land Act that can be irrigated in no other way than by boring artesian wells. Much of this land is the very best in the valley; but unless wells are bored the locators will forfeit their right to the land. Much talk has been heard and many schemes have been proposed here for getting boring machinery and sinking wells but nothing has been done, nor is it likely that anything will be done. There are enough locators interested if they would unite to put up money, buy machinery and bore their own wells. In this way they can save their locations, get title to a great deal of valuable property, and when their own wells are finished sell their machinery or go and bore wells for others by contract. There will be no lack of demand for the use of the machinery.

Married.

Last Tuesday evening Mr. P. H. Mack, County Clerk, and Miss Katie Mulholland were married at the residence of C. Mulholland at Independence. The ceremony was performed by Hon. John A. Hannah, Superior Judge. P. W. Forbes, District Attorney, was groomsman and Mrs. Eva Gunn bridesmaid. The wedding was a very quiet affair. Soon after supper the young couple went to their own home where many friends called upon them and were well entertained. The Independence brass band came out and serenaded the couple. A number of handsome presents were given, some by friends here and others sent all the way from Massachusetts. The young people are very comfortably located on Market street.

A few days ago a citizen of Independence asked, "Who will go the Legislature next session?" Here is what the Bulldozer Chronicle Union says: "The following Republicans will probably be placed in nomination: For Assembly, George W. Baumb, H. E. Wright and Harvey Boone, of Bodie, A. F. Hector, of Lundy, J. L. C. Sherwin, of Benton and John Murphy, of Bridgeport." By the custom observed in the district Mono would be entitled to name the candidate at the coming election, and it is clear from the above that she has plenty of men who covet the honor. As the district has a large Republican majority it may fairly be presumed that some one of the six named aspirants will be the next Assemblyman.

Green Domino Ball.

The Independence Brass Band will give a "green domino" party at the pavilion on the evening of Monday, March 19th. It had been intended to give the party on the eve of St. Patrick's Day until it became known that a party was to be given at Keeler the same evening, then the band boys changed the date of their ball. The programme for the party will be unique and well calculated to afford amusement to the participants. An advertisement with full particulars will appear next week.

John McComb, Charles Court and James Court, the men who it was feared had perished in Death valley, have returned to their homes in Grantsville in safety; they had a very hard time and a narrow escape from death.

Artesian Well Boring Association.

A company has been formed at Independence for the purpose of boring artesian wells. During the past three years various attempts have been made to raise funds for getting machinery and boring wells, but all of them have failed. The trouble seemed to be that those who wanted wells had no confidence in the schemes proposed. Very little interest was taken and still less money subscribed, where the promoters had not the least experience in well boring, nor any other interest beyond a chance for days work at good pay, or for a speculation where they took no risk. There is no certainty that artesian water can be found in the valley, but strong probability that it can. Nothing short of an actual test can decide the matter. It might be necessary to bore several holes before the artesian belt—if such exists—should be struck. This will call for an outlay of several thousand dollars. Very few people here can afford much money for experiments that may never profit them a dollar. If good wells should be struck at once there would be plenty of demand for the use of the machinery, and consequent profit to the owners. But there is not one farmer anywhere near Independence who has capital to spare, even for a paying investment, and all of them have such water rights as makes them indifferent to the scheme of boring wells. In a general way they would like to see the thing succeed, as it would very greatly help the country; but it may well be doubted if they will put much money into it. In order for this latest well boring scheme to succeed it will probably be necessary for the incorporators themselves to put up the necessary capital. There are a good many non-resident locators of desert land whose only chance of getting title to the land is by artesian wells. Much of the land so located would be very valuable if water can be found. Some of these locators are amply able to invest money enough to make a full test of the scheme, and probaby all of them would be willing to risk some money. A few have already authorized the editor of this paper to pledge them to the support of any feasible plan for testing if artesian water can be found. The amount of the capital stock of the company is fixed at $10,000, divided into 2,000 shares of the par value of $5 00 each. The amount actually subscribed to date is $250.

Our Next Fair.

The next annual fair of the 18th Agricultural District is fixed to be held at Independence beginning on Monday, September 17th. All goods intended for exhibition at the pavilion will be expected to be in place not later than Monday of Fair week. There will be full moon on Wednesday of that week; this is one reason for holding the fair at that time. Ample time is given for preparation and it is earnestly hoped that everybody who intends to exhibit goods at the fair will forward them so that they can be arranged in place in time for the opening day. It causes such trouble when goods are behind hand as no one can appreciate except those who have managed fairs. A premium list and speed programme will be prepared and published in due time. The first fair of the 18th District was such a gratifying success, such a revelation to the people of the District of what they can accomplish, and of the resources of the county, as surprised them far more than it did strangers to the county. When so much was done without experience and with very short preparation, we may be certain that a far grander success will be achieved this year, when everybody is interested and making preparations from the day the first fair closed. We are assured by many people in neighboring counties and by citizens of Nevada that they will attend our next Fair. These people heard such good account of our last fair that they have determined to attend our next and see for themselves. Right now we should begin to prepare for the accommodation of the great number of people who are certain to be here.

St Patrick's Day Ball.

Mr. and Mrs. Barnes will give a party at Keeler on the eve of St. Patrick's day. Since opening the hotel at Keeler a party has been given there each year, alternating one year on Washington's Birthday and the next on St. Patrick's day. Each party has been more enjoyable than the one preceding, and the rule will hold good this year. Already quite a number of Independence people have said that they will attend. See the advertisement.

BLINDED BY PREJUDICE.

Some Striki g Situations Into Which Well Informed Persons are led.

There is no end of witchcraft and deception. Years ago persons suspected of the "strange infatuation" were thrown into the water—if guilty of witchcraft, they would drown.

For many years the world was shocked at such inhumanity of man to man, but if we were to declare that people are persecuted to-day quite as remorselessly as were the so-called witches of old, our statements might be received with great incredulity.

But it is a fact.

If you do not believe it, enter any one of the schools of medical practice, and attempt to use a preparation which the code does not recognize, or even to recommend indirectly any popular remedy, such for instance, as Warner's celebrated kidney remedy, and then relate your experience.

Then you'll admit the fact.

Let us be frank with you, reader. We tell you that this is downright bigotry. Merit demands and is entitled to recognition, wherever found. If geologists tell us that diamonds must always be found in sand, would you not be a fool, if you found one in gravel, not to take it and "realize" on it?

Your friends would call you foolish.

The trouble with the doctors is that they can't cure advanced diseases of certain forms, and they know it. And yet they will not allow the use of any outside proprietary medicine, which they know has cured the disease.

For instance:

Kidney disease has no marked individual symptoms. It produces all sorts of symptoms of the commonest diseases. Not being able to treat the disease itself with success, the bigoted physician treats these symptoms!

But what good does that do? In order to stop the freshet, you must stop the flood! It won't do to try brushing it away with a broom.

Dr. J. G. Holland, whom all the world admired as a teacher of sense, wrote in Scribner's Monthly: "It is a fact that many of the best proprietary medicines of the day are more successful than many physicians, and most of them were first discovered and used in actual medical practice."

Dr. Robson of the Royal Navy of England enthusiastically endorses Warner's safe cure, as indeed do many hundreds of thousands all over the world. The late Dr. Dio Lewis, who almost never used medicines, commended it highly and said if he had any kidney disease he would use it.

This evidence is conclusive.

Paralysis, consumption, pneumonia, apoplexy, heart disease, general debility, rheumatism, all these common disorders are often only symptoms of kidney disease. Instead of admitting their inability to cure this disorder, doctors give their attention to the symptoms. If they cure one, another comes, and finally death takes the case out of their hands. Then they disguise the fact that it is bright's disease of the kidneys and say that death came from paralysis, apoplexy, pneumonia, consumption, general debility, rheumatism, heart disease, blood poisoning, or some other of the names of the direct effects of kidney disease. They are not the real disease itself.

We do not believe every advertisement that we read. Some people may perhaps regard this article as an advertisement and will not believe it, but we are candid enough to say that we believe the parties above mentioned have proved their case, and under such circumstances the public is unwise if it is long influenced by adverse prejudice.

—"Hello, Goodd'rver, where've you been?" "Been down here to a livery stable gettin' kicked by a mule." "Kicked by a mule?" "Yes." "What for?" "I'm goin' up to ask the boss if I can marry his daughter, an' I wanted to see if I was in condition."—St. Paul Globe.

TWO OMAHA MEN DIVIDE A "POT" OF $12,500.

Yesterday evening a Bee reporter had the pleasure of meeting the two happiest men in Omaha. It was at the restaurant and saloon of F. Poppendick, at the corner of Howard and Thirteenth Sts. Mirth and merriment were the order of the day and on making inquiry it was ascertained that William Poppendick, the genial host of the saloon, and Robert Price, wholesale butcher, of Tenth Street, were the joint winners of a fourth share of the third capital prize of $50,000 in The Louisiana State Lottery. 21,301 was the lucky number and was one of the four purchased by the gentleman named for $20. On receiving the list of winning numbers the ticket was at once placed in the hands of the First National bank and yesterday the full amount of the prize, less a small sum for collection, was paid over by the bank to Mr. Poppendick and the "pot" duly divided with his pard. "No," said Mr. Poppendick, "the money wasn't here for Christmas, but I ain't kicking about that, it was welcome just the same and will be a good start for the new year. Ever speculated before—well, not much. I have invested $8 in the lottery on previous occasions but never drew anything." Mr. Poppendick came to this city from Topeka some seven months ago and is well known as a saloon man all over Kansas. Mr. Price has been in business in Omaha for a considerable time. Both gentlemen have received the congratulations of hosts of friends.—Omaha (Neb.) Bee, Dec. 29.

DUTIES OF CITIZENS.

Why Public Obligations Should be Discharged Faithfully and Cheerfully.

Periodically the officers of courts complain of the disposition of men of business, wealth and standing in the community to shirk jury duty, and of the expedients of evasion and escape to which some of them resort, going so far even as to subject themselves to the liability of being proceeded against for contempt of court. In view of the importance of having only "good men and true" on our grand juries and our petit juries, and of the vital issues that are often involved in their indictments and verdicts, including property interests and the guilt or innocence of persons charged with crimes and misdemeanors, it is remarkable that any citizen fit for such honorable duty should be unwilling to take his turn when drawn as a juryman.

The efficient administration of justice depends in great part upon the character of our juries, and the courts should not be embarrassed or subjected to needless trouble or delay by efforts of good citizens to evade such service. The turn of each individual citizen to act as juryman comes only once in a great while—not more than once or twice in a lifetime, perhaps—and the term of service is generally so brief that even the busiest of men can afford the time, if they only choose to think so. At all events, in order to do each his due share as a member of the community toward insuring and maintaining justice and protecting the interests of society, every good citizen should be willing to give a portion of his time to this class of public duties occasionally, even though it be at some individual sacrifice. It should be deemed a privilege rather than a hardship; for if the good citizens shirk such service the probability is that bad citizens will be found who will be only too eager of the opportunity, and we all know what the consequences would be—consequences that the better class of people are directly interested in preventing.

There is something almost inexplicable in the reluctance with which some otherwise reasonable men consent to perform public duty, however brief the time required. They shrink from jury duty, from political duty, or from any other duty that calls them out of their offices, stores, factories or shops for a few hours each year or each decade of years, as if they owed nothing to the community but every thing to themselves. This is not good citizenship—it is equal to bad citizenship. It indicates a lack of patriotism and of public spirit. It indicates a degree of indifference to the interests of the public and of society that is only a degree short of treason.

Every citizen of a free country that is ruled by law and in which so much depends upon the disposition of citizens to conform to the requirements of the law and to co-operate with those who are intrusted with its administration should be prompt to respond to the call of public duty at all times. He should be willing to serve as a delegate to a convention, as an officer at elections, at inquests, on juries, whenever called upon to do so. It is his duty to do it—a duty which, if he refuses to perform, and will in all probability be performed by one who is less competent or less faithful. That disposition which causes men to shrink from and to evade this class of public duties is not commendable or creditable. It is a sign of weakness on the part of the shirker, and an element not only of weakness but of danger to the community. Each and all of us owe something—owe much, if not every thing—to the State, to society, and to the maintenance of justice and the common welfare, and the better element of the population can not afford to give over the work of administering justice and carrying out the forms of law and government to the disreputable and the untrustworthy, no more than any of us who have a proper regard for their individual interests can afford to transfer our homes or our private business to other hands. In brief, every man should bear in mind that, as a faithful citizen, he has public duties and obligations to discharge as well as his private interests to look after, and that those public concerns, being closely related to his private interests, can no more be neglected without serious consequences, sooner or later, than his private affairs can be left to take care of themselves.—Chicago Journal.

—With ill-concealed emotion he took the thin, worn hand in his and drew it gently toward him. Life at this moment would seem to him the intensity of bitterness. The past, with its struggle for existence, the present and its desolation, the future shrouded in uncertainty, all came before him as in a dream. A strange mist gathered before his eyes. He gasped, leaned heavily forward, and in a quivering and husky accent he exclaimed: "I'll pass!" Sylvester had caught a bobtail flush and seventeen cents were swept to the other side of the table.—Drift.

—The Kagashi tree of the natives of India is described as a tree that really weeps. If an axe-cut is made in the bark of one of these trees in spring, the sap flows from the wound in a great stream; and whenever an opening in the bark is made, the fluid escapes for a considerable time. These facts are given by a recent observer, who mentions noticing great drops falling from one broken branch at the rate of one a second, the tree having been in a "weeping" condition for at least ten days.—Arkansaw Traveler

"I've forgotten his name. He doesn't amount to much. He wrote the stories that Gribble recited last night. Look at Gribble. Look at that expression of countenance. Charmingly ridiculous."—

DECEPTION IN FOOD.

How Lard, Spices and Other Food Articles Are Adulterated.

Food adulteration still goes on. It was disclosed by Mr. Armour, the Chicago lard and pork packer, not long ago, that millions of gallons of cotton seed oil are used for adulterating lard. It is claimed by the manufacturers that the oil has no suspicion of disease about it and that it is perfectly wholesome. A large portion of the "olive oil" consumed in this country also, is the oil of cotton seed. It is sent in large quantities to England and Germany where it enters into lardine, butterine and olive oil, the same as on this side of the water. Holland imports great quantities of it to make Dutch cheese. One oil refinery last year, sold four thousand barrels of the oil to preserve sardines, and the "sardines" were not sardines at all, but some other kind of fish caught off the coast of Maine. Soap is made by the thousand boxes in Chicago with the same base. Along with all this is the assertion that the industry is as yet in its infancy; there is no telling how many food products it will enter speedily, nor how largely.

The investigation of the chemists of the National Department of Agriculture, recently completed, show that no food is so much adulterated as spices. Of twenty samples of ground cloves examined only two were pure. The others had suffered the extraction of their essential oils and had been polluted by the addition of clove stems, allspice and husks of various kinds. Of eight samples of cayenne pepper only one was pure. Of ten samples of mustard none was pure, though several had only suffered the loss of their fixed oil; the others contained quantities of wheat flour, the spurious matter being in some cases two-thirds of the compound. This made it necessary to add tumeric acid (harmless) to restore the mustard color. Ten samples of allspice were examined, eight of which were pure. Four samples of cassia were all pure. Of ten samples of ginger, four were pure. Only one out of thirteen samples of black pepper was found to be what it purported to be. A specimen sent from Baltimore to a man who had an army contract was almost entirely spurious. Cayenne pepper, black pepper, husks and mustard hulls were used to give flavor and pungency while "body" was supplied by ground beans and rice, and color by charcoal. Two samples of white pepper out of five were pure, two samples of mace out of five were pure, and three samples of nutmeg examined all were pure. A New York spice grinder lately worked off five thousand pounds of cocoanut husks.—Good Housekeeping

A Hoary Old Time Server.

"Ma," said Bobby, after a thoughtful silence, "do you know that I don't believe Santa Claus is really as good as he is cracked up to be?"

"Why, Bobby, what makes you think that?"

"Because he gives the nicest presents to little boys and girls that have rich pas."

—Nothing is so inconsistent with self-possession as violent anger. It overpowers reason, confounds our ideas, distorts the appearance and blackens the color of every object.

SHE MARRIED A SCHOLAR.

Oh, she said she'd never marry any Tom and Dick and Harry,
She'd wed some famous scientist of learning and renown;
But her Tom was quite commercial, and of Agassiz and Herschel
He was as ignorant, she said, as any circus clown.

So she gave poor Tom the mitten, and as meek as any kitten
He went to making money and forgot his wild despair;
Forgot, I say; at any rate he hastened to degenerate
Into a sordid business man, a trifling millionaire.

But she wed a scientific, and his tastes were quite terrific
For various kinds of insects and for toads and other game;
And instead of plaques and pictures, rattlesnakes and boa constrictors
He'd take into his sitting room to ornament the same.

As a zealous decorator he preferred an alligator
To a statue of Minerva or a bust of Henry Clay;
And you ought to hear him talk awhile of his bouncing baby crocodile
That he played with in his parlor last to while the time away;

And his cobra di capello, a very charming fellow,
Through his dressing room and bedroom used to nonchalantly drift;
And an elephant's proboscis and two young rhinoceroses
He presented to his children as a fitting Christmas gift.

But he sold his wife's piano to buy ipecacuanha
To feed his hippopotamus to ease his stomach aches,
And a shark ate up his baby, for you know how hungry they be,

Emaciation, Consumption, and Wasting in Children, Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites, is a most valuable food and medicine. It creates an appetite for food, strengthens the nervous system, and builds up the body. Please read: "I tried Scott's Emulsion on a young man whom Physicians gave up hope. Since he began using the Emulsion his Cough has ceased, gained flesh and strength, and from all appearances his life will be prolonged many years."—JOHN SULLIVAN, Hospital Steward, Morganza, Pa.

SOMEBODY'S CHILD.

Somebody's child is dying—dying with the flush of hope on his young face, and somebody's mother thinking of the time when that dear face will be hidden where no ray of hope can brighten it—because there was no cure for consumption. Reader, if the child be your neighbor's, take this comforting word to the mother's heart before it is too late. Tell her that consumption is curable; that men are living to-day whom the physicians pronounced incurable, because one lung had been almost destroyed by the disease. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" has cured hundreds; surpasses cod liver oil, hypophosphites, and other medicines in curing this disease. Sold by druggists.

READ THE DEATH ROLL

Which the bills of mortality of any large city may be fitly designated, and you will find that renal and vesical maladies, that is to say, these that effect the kidney or bladder, have a remarkable prominence—we had almost said—preponderance. Bright's disease and diabetes in the chronic stage are rarely cured, and gravel, catarrh of the bladder and enuresis slay many. Yet at the outset, when the trouble merely amounts to inactivity of the organs involved, the danger may be nullified by that pleasant renal tonic and diuretic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which imparts the requisite amount of tone to the organs, without overexciting them, and the use of which is convenient, and involves no elaborate preparation. Dyspepsia, a usual concomitant of renal complaints, and debility, which they invariably produce, are remedied by it. So also are constipation, malarial, rheumatic and nervous ailments.

One of the greatest causes of trouble in this world is the habit people have of talking faster than they think.

5th. It penetrates deeply but gently; searchingly and surely, seeking the pain spot in an effort to conquer.

6th. Each constituent of the formula has recognized intrinsic virtue to serve most surely the cure of pain.

SENORITA HERNANDEZ.

The Wonderfully Self-Possessed Girl Bull-Fighter of Mexico.

It was my fortune some time ago to see Senorita Hernandez, the most famous female bull-fighter in the world. So fearfully exciting was the so-called "sport" that the five thousand people in the Plazza de Torros were upon their feet in a state of wildest confusion, men yelled themselves hoarse and women fainted, all because a slender young girl had nerve enough to throw herself in the path of a fierce bull and pierce him to the heart by a single thrust. It was her farewell performance, and the strongest and fiercest torrors in the country had been advertised for. To make the novelty greater, it was announced that Senorita Hernandez would fight upon stilts, armed with only a short sword, and with none of the usual defenses and loop-holes of escape; so that in every case it was victory or death to the brave girl. The animals provided were small, active and wholly untamed, and the horns of each were trimmed and polished till the points were bright as needles, and almost as sharp. Never did veteran picator perform more expert work than was coolly executed by the youthful senorita. As the bull, mad with rage, would make his furious charge, she stood perfectly still until he had approached within three feet, when, suddenly springing aside as the animal rushed by, with one hand she would slap him in the face with the scarlet cloak which had first aroused his anger, and with the other hand dexterously thrust into his neck a gaudy banderilla, whose sharp barb, as it pierced his flesh, caused him to roar with rage and pain. Thus charge after charge was made by the maddened brute, only to be always evaded by the active girl. She played him, plagued him and tortured, as a cat would a mouse, until at last, bleeding, sore and completely exhausted with fatigue and pain, the animal would fight no more. Three wild bulls were worn out in this way by the fair Castilian; and then, wearied as she must have been, came the climax in the fulfillment of her advertised obligation, to kill a bull, with a sword scarcely two feet long, while standing on stilts directly in front of him.

The animal selected for this deadly contest was a beautiful specimen of his race, black, agile, savage and wild; he was no sooner in the arena than ready for battle. After he had been permitted to make two or three charges to warm him for his work, the governor of the district (who presided on the occasion) gave a signal, and the bugle sounded the "death call." Even habitues of the bull ring turned pale, and the silence of the grave reigned throughout the vast amphitheater. The slight young girl, with stilts securely fastened to her limbs, received the short sword, saluted the governor and turned toward her enemy with a little shout of defiance, waving her scarlet cloak to excite his anger. At this moment the distance between them was about two hundred feet. The torro, quivering with excitement and pawing the earth in the fierceness of his rage, needed no second invitation. With gleaming eyes and head lowered to the ground, he started at full speed for the object of his hate. She calmly waited until he was within twenty feet, when, bracing herself firmly on her short stilts, she held the little sword at shoulder height, ready for his coming. Whatever may have been her thoughts in that supreme moment, it was a fearful time for the spectators. When the huge brute was within four feet, she threw herself suddenly forward, gave one quick thrust with the sword, and, without waiting to note the effect of her blow, swung herself around on her stilts, and again saluted the governor. In the twinkling of an eye she turned to face the bull, and just as she did so he dropped dead, so close to her that, without moving from her position, she place one foot upon the neck of her now prostrate foe. The sharp blade, directed by the skillful hand of this wonderfully self-possessed girl, had severed the spinal cord, and death was instantaneous. For a moment the great audience sat breathless, as if paralyzed, and then such a shower of gold and silver coins fell around the victorious torradora as must have enriched her for life.—Fannie B. Ward, in Troy (N. Y.) Times.

What Push Can Accomplish.

The first experience of a millionaire merchant of Philadelphia on his arrival in this country aptly illustrates what push can accomplish. He said: "I was without money or friends. I spoke to a man on the wharf, and asked him what to do. He replied: 'Work, young man. Have you any motto?' 'No,' I said; 'what do you mean?' He said: 'Every man must have a motto. Now, think of one. Go out and hunt for work.' I started, thinking of a motto. As I walked along the street I saw painted on a door the word 'Push.' I said: 'That shall be my motto.' I did push at that door and entered an office. I was asked what I wanted. I said: 'Work, and the word on your door gave me not only a motto, but confidence.' My manner pleased the man. He asked me many questions, all of which were answered promptly. He said at last: 'I want a boy of "push," and as you have adopted that for your motto, I will try you.' He did. My success followed, and the motto that made my fortune will make that of others."—N. Y. Ledger.

THE QUACK DOCTOR.

How He Experimented Upon the Pockets of an Ignorant Crowd.

A short time ago a quack experimented in Lambeth with considerable success upon the pockets of an awe-stricken crowd. After a preliminary harangue and a terse little lecture on the viscera, which the charlatan sketched in with colored crayon upon a black board on which the human skeleton was outlined in white paint, the fellow came to business. "I am going to demonstrate to you," said he, "by a startling experiment upon one of you bystanders, that my miraculous remedy can cure all diseases of the lungs and chest. Now, whoever's got a bad cough or cold on the chest let stand forward." There was some little hesitation and a good deal of giggling. "Don't be afraid, my friends," said the quack; "it's all free, gratis, for nothing. Let any afflicted person come forward and I'll show him the nature of his disorder, and give him a packet of my lung healers for nothing." At last a man with a violent cold and cough came forward. The quack doctor pretended to sound his chest with a stethoscope of almost pantomimic proportions and informed the staring crowd that the patient was in a galloping consumption.

"My friend," said the quack to his unfortunate victim, "so terrible is this disease that you can actually see it." He handed a glass tube to the patient and then poured a pint of clear water into a large tumbler. "Just you blow into that water, my friend," he cried. The men obeyed and the water grew discolored, turbid and at last as white as if it had been mixed with milk. The patient himself became as pale as ashes. "This unhappy man, my friends," said the quack, as he held the glass on high, "if he hadn't had the good fortune to come across me to-night wouldn't have been long for this world. I should have given him about a fortnight; that's all. Now a packet of my lung-healers will cure him. What you see in the glass of water are his vitiated humors, the products of corruption. My magic lung-healers destroy these humors in the body or out of the body. Observe, my friends, watch me carefully, there is no deception here." The quack dropped a pinch from one of a packet of powders into a glass, and directed the patient to stir it with the tube. The water became immediately clear. Then he reaped his harvest. The water was lime-water, and the carbonic acid in the man's breath naturally threw down the carbonate of lime at once, and rendered the water turbid. And the miraculous lung-healer was simply a little citric acid and sugar which instantly redissolved it.—Saturday Review.

CAPTAIN LYNCH.

An Old Account of the Originator of the Lynch Law.

Andrew Ellicott, who was L'Enfant's subordinate in laying out Washington City, and who managed to supplant him, afterwards surveyed the line between the United States and the Spanish colonies in Florida. While there he met Captain Lynch, the originator of lynch law, of whom he gives in his manuscript journal the following account:

"Captain Lynch," wrote Mr. Ellicott, "was the author of the lynch laws so well known and so frequently carried into effect some years ago in some of the States, in defiance of every principle of justice and jurisprudence. I had the following details of procedure from his own lips: The lynch men associated for the purpose of punishing crimes in a summary way, without the technical and tedious forms of our courts of justice. Upon a report being made by any member of the association of a crime being committed in the vicinity of their jurisdiction, the person so complained of was immediately pursued and taken, if possible. If apprehended, he was carried before some member of the association and examined. If his answers were not satisfactory he was whipped until they were so. These extorted answers usually involved others in the supposed crime, who, in turn, were punished in like manner. These punishments were sometimes severe, in consequence of the answers extorted under the influence of the smarting whip to interrogatories put by members of the association.

"Mr. Lynch informed me that he had never in any case given a vote for the punishment of death. Some, however, he acknowledged, had been hanged, but not in the common way. A horse became their executioner. The manner was thus: The person to be hanged was placed on a horse, with his hands tied behind him. A rope was tied about his neck, and its other end, not too long, was fastened to the limb of a tree over his head. In this situation the person was left. When the horse, in pursuit of food or for any other cause, moved, the criminal was left suspended by his neck. This was called aiding the civil authority. It seems almost incredible," continues Mr. Ellicott, "that such proceedings should be had, governed by known laws. It may, nevertheless, be relied on. I should not have asserted it as a fact had it not been related to me by Mr. Lynch himself and by his neighbors."—Benj. Perley Poore, in Boston Budget.

MIRACULOUSLY SAVED.

A Terrible Calamity Averted by the Breaking Down of a Locomotive.

I have a brother who is now in the grocery business in Richmond, Va., but he was for eleven years a dispatcher on a Southern road. He is a sober, quick-witted and industrious man, but although he is only thirty-six years old, his hair is almost as white as snow, and there are times when the cold sweat stands on his forehead and he trembles like a leaf.

When he was a dispatcher, one warm afternoon in August he was fanning himself and trying, without meeting with much success, to counteract the effects of the hot winds, which sometimes blew in that part of the country, in addition to the intense heat from the sun, which shone on the awning overhanging his window. He had been closely confined to the office for many months, and the constant strain had probably wearied both body and mind. At any rate he had sent an order for an express train to meet a special, on which were a number of officers of the road, at a certain station; then, by one of those unaccountable slips sometimes made by the most well-trained and careful minds, ordered the special to a station by the meeting point. He took his finger from the key and his eyes from the train sheet, and again began to fan himself vigorously and allowed his mind to wander at will. A few minutes afterward, more from force of habit than from any other reason, his eyes were cast over the train sheet. Like a flash of lightning, almost at the instant he saw his mistake. He seized the key and was about to correct it, when he realized to his horror that it was too late. Both trains had been reported as having passed their stations several minutes before and were now fast making toward each other at not less than forty miles an hour. When the certain result of his fearful blunder fully dawned upon him, he tried to get up, but his limbs were numb and refused to fulfill their functions. As he expressed it, he saw the two trains as they were rapidly approaching each other; saw them but a mile apart, with their precious loads of human freight. He knew every inch of the road, and knew that where they must meet there was a high wall of rock on one side and a deep ravine on the other; knew that a horrible death awaited in another instant almost two-thirds of the passengers of both trains, for it was on a curve, where the engineers could not see each other until it would be too late, then a mist came before his eyes, and, as he almost fainted, he saw in his mind's eye, the crash of the two engines, and telescoped cars roll over the embankment and piled in a great heap. Loud above the hissing steam he heard the cries of the dying. He fainted away.

When he recovered consciousness he heard his call on the line. With almost a superhuman effort he arose and answered. The operator at the station to which he sent the order to the special then told him that the engine of the special had broken down as it was pulling out and he wanted further orders. "Hold it!" he flashed back, and a mountain rolled off his mind. In another moment, when he had time to collect his thoughts, he attempted to go to a window, but found that his limbs were numb and the cold sweat was standing on his hands and forehead. There was also a strange stinging sensation at the roots of his hair, as though some one was pricking him on the head with many needles. That night when he left the office and with a great effort walked home his wife jokingly asked him what he had put on his hair. Upon looking into the glass he was horrified to see that it had in those few moments become almost as white as snow.

He resigned his position next day without giving a cause for so doing. Often since then he has told me that money could not hire him to again accept a position as a train dispatcher.—Philadelphia News.

HANDSOME AFRICANS.

How the Bangala Women Ornament Their Arms and Shoulders.

The Bangalas are a fine race physically, being tall, powerful and splendidly formed, with features by no means of the negro type; the women are the handsomest I have seen in Africa. Their dress is scanty, consisting for the most part only of a waist-cloth for the men and a short kilt of woven grass for the women; but men of high degree often wear mantles of dressed goat or other skins. They cicatrize their arms, shoulders and busts in patterns by cutting the skin and injecting some irritant. Sometimes the result looks very well; but in other cases the process is not successful, and raises huge unsightly lumps of flesh. The chief of Iboko, when I arrived, was an old man over eighty—his age was reported by some to be eighty-four, by others eighty-six—who had lost one eye in battle and possessed fifty wives. He was over six feet in height, with a fine, well-developed figure, and, but for his dirty white hair and shriveled skin, would have passed for a man of half his age. He was much attached to Captain Coquilhat (named "Mwafa" or the "Eagle" by the natives), and never undertook any thing without consulting him. The scene just after our arrival at Bangala, when, "Le Roi des Bangalas" being announced as we were all sitting over our after-dinner coffee, Mata Bwyki entered, wearing his royal hat of leopard skin and attended by several of his wives, and enfolded Captain Coquilhat, gold-spangled uniform and all, in an ample bear's hug, was really worth seeing.—Blackwood's Magazine.

PARIS PAVEMENTS.

An Army of Men and Women Employed in Cleaning Them.

Wooden pavements are slowly taking the place of every other kind in Paris. On the 1st of January, 1884, this system had just been introduced and was being experimented with on a surface of 707,400 square feet; by the end of the year 2,832,056 square feet of streets was paved in this way. Great as this rate of progress seems it is not half fast enough, for there still remains 92,370,000 square feet of streets paved with stone or macadam. With all their advantages of noiselessness and cleanliness wooden pavements have the drawback of being very expensive, not only to put down, but also to keep in repair. It costs 92 1-5 cents the square meter, while stone pavements do not ever cost more than 15 1-5 the square meter. The streets are shaded by 98,860 trees, the sidewalks are supplied with 8,334 benches where the tired may rest their weary limbs, and to keep the thoroughfares reasonably clean the city expends 21,890,000 francs annually.

A large portion of this sum goes to pay the 3,000 men and women who are employed to sweep the streets and gutters with birch brooms. The brigade of street sweepers come from the provinces, but Italy furnishes a strong contingent to the force. There are two classes of these balayeurs and balayeuses—the auxiliaries and the regulars. The former are paid from 6 to 8 cents an hour, and are expected to do ten hours' work a day, which is divided up as follows: From 4 to 11 a. m. and from 1 to 4 p. m.; but it often happens, in bad weather, that supplemental hours of work have to be performed, while on the other hand, in fair weather, the days are cut down to half time. The auxiliaries are recruited according to the need of the service, and many of them are men and women who have other trades in which, for the time being, they are unable to find employment. Of late the city has made it a rule to offer five or six days' work as auxiliary balayeurs to the inmates of the night refuges, and in this way a number of declasses—university graduates, professional men, ex-government employes, etc.—find their way into the street-cleaning brigade. Few of these, however, remain in it permanently. The regulars, who are known as cantonniers, are employed by the month, and no one is appointed who is past the age of forty-five years. They receive a fixed salary of 105 francs a month, and each gang is under the command of a chief who is paid 120 francs a month for his services as boss. The balayeurs are divided into eight sections, and to each of them is assigned a section of the city. At intervals during the day the chief assembles his gang and calls the roll to assure himself that all are at their posts. Women as well as men are employed to sweep, but few of them earn as much as 50 cents a day. For most part the women who accept this employment are peasants from the environs of Paris, and they are usually past middle life. The other day the balayeurs and balayeuses held a meeting and resolved to organize a trade syndicate, with a view to securing an increase in their pay, which they claim is not only too small, but is also too dependent on the caprice of the officials in charge of their department. As modern cities go, Paris takes high rank for the cleanliness of its streets. The gutters measure more than 500 miles in length, and every morning water is turned into them and they are swept by hand.—Cor. N. O. Picayune.

CHINESE SUICIDES.

A Startling Statement with Respect to Opium Poisoning.

A Catholic paper published in China prints a statement of a startling description with respect to opium poisoning. Opium is the general medium for suicide in China, and the remedy which is recommended, namely, to make the would-be suicide swallow the blood of a live duck as an emetic, may be passed by with a smile—although, should it act as an emetic, it may, perhaps, be as useful as any other. The statement that follows, however, is more worthy of attention, for the native paper says that there is reason to doubt if the supposed successful suicides actually die at all, as the official exhumation of many bodies shows that after the fumes have evaporated the buried persons have struggled violently to free themselves. There are in this and other countries many well-attested instances of persons having been buried alive, and it is generally supposed that they have been the victims of a sort of trance, closely simulating death. Naturally, in a country like China, where medical science does not exist, and where burials take place a very few hours after death, the proportion of mistakes will be vastly larger than with us; and the heavy torpor induced by a large dose of opium would be frequently mistaken for death. It would, however, be interesting to know whether there are any facts whatever to support the Chinese view that, at least, a considerable number of persons buried as dead, after taking opium, recover when the poison has to some extent evaporated.—London Standard.

ATTRACTIVE IZALCO.

The Most Active Volcano in the Central American States.

Your Central American correspondent was recently at Izalco, the most active and attractive of the volcanoes of Central America. It never harms anybody. There is a church at its base, its buttressed walls quite eighteen feet thick. It has stood the rockings and racket of daily quakes through one hundred and eighty years. Three great bells, each weighing one thousand pounds, and constituted quite one-half of silver, are suspended in the churchyard. They are often tolled by Izalco when the jolly mountain is in a rollicking good humor, or perhaps when it is "colicky." Its explosions occur at intervals of from three to five and fifteen minutes. Now and then the great vent for explosive forces within are hermitically sealed for five or six hours, and even longer. Then the country has ague fits and San Salvador is shaky, and the prescribed path of earthquakes, which is about twenty-five miles wide, is "rattled." This, too, is the width of the coal-beds along this route of earthquakes. Beneath the coal is the river of oil that is on fire at Izalco. There coal-oil and a stream of water meet. Each explosion of the mountain emits two columns, one of black smoke from the burning oil, the other of white steam from Rio Caliente, which runs out from beneath the mountain and crosses the railway five miles from the volcano. The water is so hot that it peeled the hair off my mule's leg that crossed it a few days ago. When an explosion occurs in Izalco, not only do these two columns of steam and of smoke rise up among the clouds, but great stones and ashes and scoriæ and vast volumes of lava are emitted. The greater portion of all this measureless volume of earthly mineral substances falls back into the crater, closing it and resting on it as a mighty valve. Great masses of earth and stone fall in from the interior of the mountain side, and then the valve is heavier and deeper and broader than usual, and then the oil must burn longer, and greater and more resistless volumes of gas must be produced. The flames rage, the waters boil, gas and steam and smoke explode at last, and the country along the earthquake's or coal measure's route is rudely shaken, and the thunders of the universe are heard roaring through the vast distances in measureless caverns beneath Izalco.

Nobody should be afraid of earthquakes. They are simply products of forces of coal-oil gas and water. All that astonishing yarn about mother earth cooling off and contracting her belt is very fine and grand and imposing, as a theory, but it won't hold water; certainly not that of Rio Caliente, which took the hair, last Saturday, off my gray mule's shins.—*San Salvador Cor. ## PASTEUR'S METHODS.

What Experience Has Shown in the Matter of His Hydrophobia Cure.

Whether a cure for hydrophobia has been discovered is still matter of doubt. The widespread gratification which sprung up when the news was flashed throughout the world that M. Pasteur, the eminent French pathologist, had evolved a remedy for the disease has given place to doubt created by evidences which have bred severe criticisms. So severe, indeed, were the attacks of certain Vienna professors that M. Pasteur recently deemed it expedient to defend himself and his practice in a letter addressed to the Vienna Imperial Society of Physicians.

In favor, however, of M. Pasteur's position, much that is weighty is offered in the report of a royal commission appointed in April of last year by the British Local Government Board to investigate M. Pasteur's system. Many experiments were had with rabbits and dogs exposed to the attacks of hydrophobic dogs and cats. Some of the subjects were previously inoculated on M. Pasteur's plan; others were not, and, while only one of the protected animals died, every one of the others succumbed. Upon this the conclusion of the commission is, that "it may be deemed certain that M. Pasteur has discovered a method of protection from rabies comparable with that which vaccination affords infection from small-pox." In support of this inference the commission states that in fifteen months Pasteur inoculated 2,682 persons, of whom 31 died of rabies. Assuming that 5 per cent.—the lowest estimate of mortality among the unprotected—would have died if no method of inoculation had been discovered, the number of deaths would have been 134. Hence, it holds the opinion that inoculation saved 100 lives.

But, as against this favorable view, there is to be taken into account a very significant record of M. Pasteur's practice. It is affirmed that the average annual number of deaths from hydrophobia in France since 1850 has been 30. Pasteur records that 31 of the patients inoculated by him in fifteen months died of hydrophobia. This forces one of two conclusions: either during the fifteen months spoken of the cases of hydrophobia must have run far above the average number, or M. Pasteur's treatment effected but a small reduction in the number of deaths. All things considered, it seems desirable to hold the new theories and practice as still on probation.—Demorest's Monthly.

THE GARFIELD FARM.

One of the Most Charming Country Places in the Vicinity of Cleveland.

The old farm in Mentor, which Garfield bought some years before his death, and on which he used to spend about the happiest days of his life, is fast becoming one of the most beautiful country residences in the vicinity of Cleveland. None of the family is at present there, though it has come to be recognized as the family home. Uncle Joseph Rudolph, Mr. Garfield's brother, stays on the place, and looks after it and after the extensive improvements which are being made upon it. Additions have been built to the old house, and every thing that money would do to make it a lovely home has been done. Of course a plumber's bill can give no idea of the amount of work performed, but even a plumber could hardly have the hardihood to charge $13,000 for his services unless he had at least driven by the house, and $13,000 is the amount which has been paid to plumbers for their last summer's work upon the house and its dependencies. The other outlays have been in proportion.

This is only carrying out General Garfield's idea. He always loved the farm, and loved to consider himself a farmer. He loved farm people and farm ways, and the plain, homely talk of farm neighbors. He always went away from the Mentor home freshened and brightened in mind and body, and with his face bronzed and his hands hardened by work. Whatever charms the excitement of political life had for him he was always anticipating his return to the quiet Mentor home, and it was there he had planned to spend the declining years of his life. His devoted wife in clinging to the old place and making it the family home is only knowing what she knew would be most pleasing to him. Her beautiful Cleveland home is for sale, and has been for some time, although the price she asks for it—$50,000—is not extravagantly high. The Washington house brought about what the appraisers estimated it at—$30,000. The total appraised value of Garfield's real estate was put down at $37,000 in round numbers. He paid $7,000 for the Mentor farm, though, of course, at the time of his death it was worth much more than that. In fact, some years before he died, he put a mortgage of $8,000 upon it, which, for some reason, he did not release for a long time, though he was abundantly able to do so.

Indeed, there was at the time of General Garfield's death a very general misapprehension as to his financial condition. It was the common opinion that he was comparatively a poor man. The fact is that he was comparatively a rich man. There are here in Painesville one or two men who are millionaires, but a man hereabouts who can command $50,000 is a rich man. General Garfield left, at the appraisers' very low estimate, a good deal over $100,000 in almost instantly available assets.

It will be remembered that he left no will. His brother-in-law, Uncle Joseph Rudolph, was appointed administrator, and his bondsmen were Dr. W. S. Streator, N. B. Sherwin and Dr. J. P. Robinson. No man in Ohio stands higher in point of business honor and sound business judgment than Dr. Streator, and both he and Dr. Robinson were warm, intimate friends of General Garfield. Sherwin was at one time postmaster in Cleveland, and is a sharp, shrewd little man, whose admiration for Garfield amounted to a sort of frenzy. The amount of the bond was $100,000. The appraisers were Dr. Robinson, E. T. A. Aldrich and William Murray the Second. Mr. Murray is always particular to sign himself Murray the Second for some reason, an uncle having enjoyed the distinction of being Murray the First. The appraisers filed their inventories in the Lake County Probate office on March 11, 1882. They set aside the $10,000 in money, and something over $7,000 in other property for the support of the family during the twelve-month, and after this they appraised the balance of the personal property at about $68,000. The entire estate, therefore, including the $37,000 real estate, amounted, according to the appraisement, to between $112,000 and $115,000. So that even had not the people come with their generous impulse to the help of the family, General Garfield's wife and children would have been left in by no means destitute circumstances.

It was a good deal of a surprise to the people here—that is, to some of them—to learn that the General was in such comfortable circumstances, and there are many who believe that he was worth even more than that, and that his property at the time of his death would not have fallen much short of $200,000 or $250,000. This, however, is largely a matter of speculation, and is based upon the gratuitous assumption that the appraisers and those near him, who had the management of the affairs, would not over estimate his wealth or do any thing to overthrow the popular belief that he died a poor man.—Painesville (O.) Cor. Chicago Herald.

AN UNCOMMON FEE.

A Grateful Patient Who Offered His Whole Stock in Trade to a Physician.

The medical profession does not bear the reputation of a calling which develops a grasping and avaricious character. On the contrary there is no vocation in which gratuitous service is more frequently rendered. But here is a case in which the patient offered as a fee his whole stock in trade, and the physician received it. The case does infinite credit to the patient's generous impulses and thoughtful survey of his resources.

The other day a ragged, unkempt newsboy pulled the bell of the residence of Dr. George F. Shrady, and asked the servant if "the doc was in." Just then Dr. Shrady emerged from the parlor, and the newsboy made a rush at him with an upturned thumb.

"What's the matter, boy?" asked the doctor.

"Pisen'd thumb, doctor," answered the youth.

"How?"

"Cat."

"H'm! Come in."

The gamin marched into the study, and had his "pisen'd thumb" duly doctored. During the process he explained that he had been chasing a cat.

"I cornered the old Tom in an ash barrel," continued the newsboy, "an' jes' as I was pullin' him out by his tail he goes back on hisself, turns around, and gives me an almighty bite."

"Why did you come to me?" asked Dr. Shrady.

"Oh! I didn't want to go to any o' them common fizzishuns."

"But uncommon physicians want uncommon fees," said the doctor, eyeing the urchin; "how much have you got?"

The boy dived into his ragged trousers' pocket, fished out some cents, and held them in his open, dirty hand. Dr. Shrady smiled, and told him to put them back."

"Say, doc," said the lad, determined to pay something; "here take a Daily Noos," and he flopped one on the table. Just as he got to the door of the study he suddenly turned back, and said: "Say, doctor, I only got 'nother left; yer might ters well have this," and flopped the second Daily Noos on the table. Then he paddled off to the front door, hitching up his trousers, but a thought seemed to strike him suddenly, and turning back he peered in at the study door, and said, as he pulled a lock of his hair: "Say, doc, I fergot ter thank yez."

Dr. Shrady has many rich patients, but this is the first time he has had a patient's whole stock in trade as a fee.—N. Y. Herald.

The great strike and riots in Pennsylvania give point and emphasis to the demand for change in the immigration laws. Nearly all the strikers and rioters are Poles, Hungarians and other Europeans who are brought into the country to work for less wages and take the places of American citizens. In their own country these people had no voice in making the laws; all they knew of law was that it was used to keep them in subjection, therefore they hate law and will violate it at every opportunity. Violence, riot and bloodshed are the only remedies they know for any public grievance, real or imaginary. Such people ought not to be allowed to come into the country; they swell the gains of capitalists and decrease the wages of our own citizens; their riots bring disgrace upon us in foreign countries, for care is taken to describe these riots as the work of Americans, and as a proof of the uncivilized and barbarous condition of the American people. The law should be at once changed so as to keep out of our country these people, who are so ignorant and brutal that in their own native countries great standing armies are needed to keep them in subjection.

TAKE SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

For all Diseases of the Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Spleen.

This purely vegetable preparation, now so celebrated as a Family Medicine, originated in the South in 1828. It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.

JOHN C. EVANS, Stockman, Mo., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer runs more hard labor and sooner in a three foot tub than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. It can will pay any reasonable man that will take as much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and not no more. I could sell one at every house, if they had to take the feathers from under their sheets and bolsters to pay for it."

JOHN R. DODGE, JR., leader, Nashua, Iowa, writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer? Might last summer. Yes, it is the best machine ever invented by man. Yes! We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. Yes. If you run short, you can not buy ours for gold."

I will ship a sample to the first desiring an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best seller in the world for saving labor, clothes and soap. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.

DIED.

McGEE—At Bishop Creek, March 4th, 1888, Mrs. McGee, aged 81 years.

Mr. G. Sanger was down from Alvord during the week.

More water pipe continues to be laid in various parts of town.

Julius Roeper has lumber on the ground to build opposite Rhine's store.

Mr. O. I. Mairs got back home from Los Angeles last Saturday evening.

Mr. W. O. Merony, of Bishop Creek was in town a few days this week.

A man named Levy is reported to have died at Candelaria of small-pox.

Arthur says it was Yank; and Yank says it was Arthur. Perhaps Pete knows.

Mr. C. Meysan and Felix Meysan, of Lone Pine were in town last Wednesday.

Mr. J. C. Crocker, of Big Pine, has gone to San Francisco; he will remain but a short time.

Rain set in Wednesday afternoon and continued to pour down heavily till next morning.

Rev. T. E. Sisson being at Bishop Creek there will be no service at the M. E. Church tomorrow.

Mrs. Eva Gunn has returned home to Darwin from a visit of several weeks in this vicinity.

A pension has been granted to Mrs. Josephine Arison, widow of Joseph Arison, of Bishop Creek.

Mr. J. Creaser. of Benton, and Mr. S. Spratt were in town on business at the Land Office at the middle of the week.

A run of ore from the Poleta mine was finished at the Maxim mill last Monday. It made about the average yield.

A. R. Conklin Esq. left town on Thursday morning for San Francisco. He expects to return about the first of next month.

Mr. L. F. J. Wrinkle, of Virginia City, arrived in town last Thursday morning and stayed till this morning, when he went north again.

The Odd Fellows have got a drawing made of a plan for a new hall. The design is for a two story building; it would be quite a handsome structure.

Phil Cartier had twenty tons of ore hauled from the Golden Star mine this week down to the railroad. The ore will be worked at the Maxim mill.

Mrs. Dr. Woodin went up to Big Pine on Thursday morning at the request of Mrs. J. C. Crocker to vaccinate a number of children there, and grown people too.

Henry Melone has gone on a prospecting trip to Death valley. He will also act as deputy Assessor for the assessment of property in the southern end of the county.

Mr. Williams Charles charged Dan. Leahy with threatening to kill him. Leahy was arrested and P. W. Forbes went up to Bishop Creek on Thursday to attend to the case.

Mr. and Mrs. N. Rhine left Independence last Tuesday for San Francisco. Mr. Rhine expects to be back here about a week hence; Mrs. Rhine intends staying in the City several months.

A case of small-pox was discovered in Virginia City toward the end of last week. The sufferer was a man named Frazier. Vigorous measures were taken to prevent the spread of the disease.

The Crocker Brothers have engaged lumber from the new mill for building a new hotel, a livery stable and a great deal of fencing at Big Pine. All this work they expect to accomplish this spring.

The new saw mill at Big Pine will be turning out lumber soon. Rustic, flooring and ceiling and all kinds of lumber will be manufactured. The mill is in a good body of timber that will yield excellent building material.

Mr. H. L. Robinson has got young trees and is now setting out ten acres of orchard at his place at George's Creek. There is a general variety of fruit but the major portion is winter apples. Mr. Robinson has fine land for an orchard.

A good deal of new snow has fallen upon the Sierra during the week. The canyons are now filled to a great depth. In the valley the buds on the peach and apricot trees are ready to open and the trees will be in full bloom within another week.

Mr. Barnes is making another large addition to his hotel at Keeler. A distinguished stranger who arrived at Independence a few days ago says that another important improvement has been made at the hotel; this is the engagement of a new cook of great ability.

From the report of the Signal Service officer stationed at Keeler it would appear that the rainfall was steadily increasing. In the month of February, 1886, the rainfall was 0.14 inches; in 1887 it was 0.93 inches and in 1888 it was 1.21 inches. This is an increase nearly nine fold as between 1886 and 1888.

The artesian well company met last Monday and elected S. D. Thurston Superintendent and A. R. Conklin Secretary. So far $250 has been paid into the Treasury for stock; it was decided at the meeting to send Mr. Thurston on an expedition over the State to solicit subscriptions for stock, far as the money in the Treasury would last to pay his expenses.

Last Monday evening a stranger entered the office at Mairs hotel and was terrified to see a crowd of men there with bare, bloody arms and all excited. He was quite comforted to discover that there had not been a massacre, but that the bloody arms were the result of vaccination just done by Dr. Woodin and the men were waiting for the sears to dry.

Last Wednesday James Turner of Big Pine got a painful hurt. He was coming to town riding on a buckboard and leading a horse. At Camp Independence when crossing a small bridge the horse suddenly pulled back, and Mr. Turner was dragged out by the halter and dashed violently on to the ground. His right wrist was badly injured, and it may take a long time to get well.

Prospecting in Death Valley.

James Count, Charles Count and J. A. McComb, the miners who were supposed to have been lost in Death valley recently, say that region is a miners paradise. The men say the whole country is full of quartz veins. These crop out in the canyons where channels have been cut through the lava into the granite, slate and other country rock. They saw veins of quartz 200 feet in width. In one of these was an unknown black metal. They got good gold prospects in many places by horning out the dirt alongside the quartz veins, and brought back many samples for assay. They say there is no difficulty in prospecting the country if prospectors take along pack animals. Plenty of good water can be found by digging three or four feet. The men are getting ready to go back again on another prospecting tour; they have strong faith that they will find the famous Breyfogle mine.

Spying Out The Land

A party of strangers arrived at Independence last Monday from San Francisco, consisting of G. P. Rixford, business manager of the San Francisco Bulletin, his brother-in-law, Mr. William Corey, of Manchester New Hampshire, and a cousin of the latter, Mr. Hiram Corey, of Salinas, Monterey County, Cal. Mr. Rixford located a section of desert land down near Owens Lake about two years ago, and he came here to see what chance there is to get water upon it; his friends accompanied him merely to see the country. Mr. William Corey visited Salt River valley, in Arizona, recently, and thinks seriously of going back there to invest some money; he said he had not seen any other country on the Pacific coast that pleased him so well as that. Mr. Hiram Corey owns seven thousand acres of land in Monterey county, that he recently bonded to parties for a quarter of a million dollars; he has a dairy there of five hundred cows and much of the land is in a high state of cultivation. He was in Owens valley in the early days and hauled the lumber for the old Crysopolis mill; he left the valley before the mill was built and this is his first visit back here since that time. When Mr. Rixford made his desert location six friends of his each located a section about the same time; he says they all mean to try and get water upon the land so that they may acquire title.

The Eastside Canal.

During several weeks past Mr. McIver has been cutting through very hard ground on the east side canal, about two and a half miles north of Independence station. This caused slow progress to be made, though the work was pushed vigorously. The worst ground is now cut through, the ditching machine has again been started up and progress will be much more rapid. Mr. McIver has several more horses, enough to keep two additional scrapers at work; the whole force will be kept at work on the upper end of the ditch till it shall be finished to the river. Mr. McIver is confident he can accomplish this by the first of April, when water can at once be turned into the canal and conveyed at least as far south as Independence station. This would admit of work being began on many hundreds acres of land.

Runaway.

Last Monday Mr. W. S. Morton, of Blackrock, had a bad runaway. He was on his way home from Independence and in the wagon with him were his son and daughter. When passing the residence of Mr. C. A. Walter, at Camp Independence, a dog came out barking loudly. Mr. Morton had a young colt hitched to the wagon; the horses made a sudden jump and the wagon tongue was broken; the part that remained attached to the wagon plunged into the ground; Miss Morton and her brother were both pitched out, but their father was left in the wagon. The young man instantly jumped up and grasped the bridles of the horses but was thrown down and trampled on by both animals and badly hurt. He was conveyed home as quickly as possible but has since been confined to his bed. Mr. Morton and his daughter escaped without serious injury.

Supervisors Proceedings.

The Board of Supervisors of Inyo County met in special session at the Court house at Independence on Wednesday, March 7th 1888, at 7.30 o'clock p. m. and there were present Supervisors Eldred, Boland and Robinson. Mr. Eldred was elected Chairman pro tem.

A resolution was adopted by the Board providing for the appointment of a health officer for the county. Dr. J. J. Woodin was appointed to the office and given all the power the law confers on such officer. This being the only object for which the meeting had been called the Board adjourned.

signed J. R. Eldred.

Attest P. H. Mack Chairman pro tem. Clerk.

Indians and Small Pox.

Indians are constantly coming and going between Owens valley and Candelaria. In this way the small-pox may be brought here. If the disease should break out among the Indians it would go through the valley like a prarie fire. Some precautions should be taken to prevent the spread of this terrible disease among us. The best protection is vaccination. Physicians who are supplied with vaccine matter should let it be known to the public. The danger of infection is imminent; one day's delay to be vaccinated may be fatal; don't run the risk of death from such a loathsome disease; be vaccinated, and have the children vaccinated.

Death of a Pioneer.

Mrs. McGee died last Sunday at the home of her son, Barton McGee, at Bishop Creek. She wrs aged eighty-one years, and was one of the first white settlers in Owens valley. On one occasion she had a very narrow escape from being killed by Indians. In company with two of her sons and a colored man named Charley, she was traveling down the valley. At Fish Spring hill the party were attacked by a large number of Indians. A vigorous defense was made, and the party made their escape in safety, except the colored man, who was killed near the river and at the upper end of what is now known as the Curtis ranch.

The Band.

On every occasion when they can be of service our band boys are prompt to turn out. They are to much expense in money and give a great deal of time to perfect themselves in their musical studies, and all this more for the public entertainment than for their own interest. A ball will be given in the Pavilion on Monday evening, March 19th for the benefit of the band. Everybody should, and no doubt will, attend to give the boys a rousing benefit.

Odd Fellows.

At the regular meeting of the Odd Fellows on last Thursday evening the plan for a new hall was considered; but as only a few members of the lodge were present no final action was taken. Further consideration of the subject was postponed for two weeks. It is earnestly requested that as many members as can attend will be at the meeting on Thursday of week after next.

The Desert Land Law.

A change should be made in the law governing the location of desert land. As the law now stands no more than six hundred and forty acres of desert land can be located by one person. But vast areas of land otherwise good are so situated that great outlay of money would be necessary to convey water for irrigation, and without such outlay the land is absolutely worthless. The quantity that may be located by one person is too small to induce any man having the needed capital to construct expensive canals. The result is that thousands of acres of land that could be made very productive, and that would sapport a large population, are left in the desert condition, and will remain so unless the law shall be changed. No county; no state or the nation gets any benefit from the lands in their present condition. It would be much better if the law were so framed that these lands could be sold outright and in such quantity as buyers might want. Then capital would at once be invested in purchase and reclamation. The Government would realize millions of dollars from the sale of the lands, and in a very few years there would be large populations in regions where there is not an inhabitant. In California alone there are tens of thousands of acres of land now desert, and that will remain desert, that at once would be bought and speedily improved if the law were changed as suggested. It need not take long to decide which would be the best, to have the lands sold and improved or not to be improved at all.

School Books.

A circular in reference to school books has been received from the State Superintendent. An opinion of the Attorney General is quoted, and then the Superintendent goes on to say: "From the foregoing it is plain that no new books should be adopted, and no changes of books, now in use [excepting for books published by the State], can legally be made without advertising for sixty days, and no changes, or adoptions, can be legally made at any time, except during the months of May and June. The following books, of the State series are now ready for use: First, Second, and Third Readers, Speller, Advanced Arithmetic, and Primary Number Lessons. The History of the United States and the English Grammar will be ready in July 1888. The Physiology and Elementary Grammar are expected to be ready by January 1889, and the Geographies by July 1889. The State has made no provision for publishing other books than those named above. I recommend that all books now in use in those studies for which the State is providing text-books, be retained until the State books are ready, since a change in any of these books will entail an unnecessary expense upon the pupils.

Respecfully, IRA G. HOITT,

The Emperor Dead.

The following dispatch to the INYO INDEPENDENT announced the death of the German Emperor.

BERLIN, Thursday, March 7th—The Emperor William died this morning at 8:30.

Notwithstanding the great age of William the news of his death was rather unexpected. His son and successor, now the Emperor Frederick, is dying of cancer in his throat. He in turn would be succeeded by his son William, a young man aged about 28 years. Bismark, who has long been the virtual ruler of Germany, will be 73 years old the first day of next month, and cannot be expected to be able to bear such a load of responsibility a great while longer. The affairs of the Empire are now so well arranged and its power so firmly established that the passing away of the men who made it what it is may not bring about much change. It is far more likely that changes will be effected gradually by the growth of liberal ideas and of increased power of the legislative body than that any sudden revolution will take place.

New Railroad

A report comes that a new company has been incorporated to build a railroad from Los Angeles to Salt Lake. Unlike another concern organized a few months ago, the projectors of this appear to mean business. The company owns Rattlesnake island and the Altadina Railroad in Los Angeles county. A mortgage was filed in Los Angeles last week for the issuance of bonds amounting to $1,500,000, which are to be utilized for the construction of the first fifty miles of the road. Some 70 per cent of the stock of the company is held in New York. The mortgage is made by the American Finance Company, and the security given is the railroad and terminal property of the company above mentioned. After leaving Los Angeles the road is outlined to run through the counties of San Bernardino, Kern and Inyo, passing Owens Lake to a point on the eastern boundary line of the State, the distance being 275 miles. J. P. Woodbury is President and A. B. Monahon Secretary of the company. It is not at all improbable that the Carson and Colorado Railroad Company, of which D. O. Mills is President, is behind this scheme. In this event the San Pedro and Los Angeles would go no farther north than Keeler. This report is to be taken for what it may be thought worth.

Distrust The Trusts.

The American colonies were driven into rebellion mainly by the stamp act passed by the English Parliament. But all the tyranical acts of the English government were not so bad as the system of trusts now growing up under our own laws. These trusts are vast combinations for wholesale robbery under the forms of law. It is absurd to the last degree to suppose that a free people must let the laws be used by a lot of conspirators for the robbery of the people who make the laws. The law must be kept in the spirit rather than in the letter, for it is the letter that killeth, but the spirit quickeneth and giveth life. If there is now no law by which these gigantic monopolies may be controlled, a law must be found, and that speedily. It should not be one day in the power of any set of vastly rich men to dictate to the millions of the United States what they must pay for sugar, oil, wheat, or any other article used by them.

San Bernardino papers want the Carson and Colorado road to be taken to Los Angeles by way of San Bernardino, through Cajon pass. The business men and capitalists are urged to assist in having the road taken that way, as it would open up a large area by way of Kramer, besides giving San Bernardino an opening into Owens valley.

More Railroads.

A man who came to town last Wednesday from Mescal, in the south east part of this county, brought important news from that region. He says there are two surveying parties in the field, each locating a route for a railroad. One of the parties is surveying a route from the present terminus of a road in southern Utah to Dagget or Fenner, on the A. P. road, by the way of Pahranagat valley, Rio Virgin, Los Vegas, Timber Mountain and Goat springs. This route would give access to a great deal of rich mineral country that has already been prospected in part. There are now eighteen men employed in lead mines at Goat springs. The owners of these mines say that if the road goes through they will employ two hundred miners. Another route is being surveyed from Mojave; it is not yet certain if this route will go by the way of Furnace Creek; or by way of Resting springs and the upper Armagosa. This route would give access to all the great borax fields in the southern end of the county; the greatest deposits of that mineral now known in the world. The whole country through which this line would run is rich in various minerals, including gold, silver, copper and lead. It would also give Los Angeles access to the great coal fields of Utah. The reporter says that the surveying parties are buying and locating all the timber claims and land and water they can get on the lines of their surveys. One of the parties has bought a saw mill and all the timber claims on Timber Mountain. All this would indicate great undertakings and lively times for the lower end of the county. From Independence to Resting Springs, near the county line, the distance in a nearly direct line is about one hundred and eighty miles.

In the Superior Court.

In the case of Turner vs. Turner, a suit for divorce by parties living at Bishop Creek; the Court gave judgment allowing the plaintiff fifty dollars per month alimony and five hundreds dollars counsel fees. Forbes & Gill, counsel for defendant, have taken an appeal to the Supreme Court.

In the suit of Walker vs. Campbell, a suit for recovery of property at Big Pine; argument was made before the Superior Court last Thursday. A. R. Conklin Esq., of counsel for defendant, cited very many decisions by the Supreme Court of our own and other States, all of which, he claimed, clearly established the fact that by laches and neglect the plaintiff was long since barred from reopening the case. Judgment had been given against the plaintiff over five years before the present proceedings were begun; and as nothing whatever had been done in the case during that interval, counsel contended that the case could not again be opened. As Mr. Conklin was to leave town next morning to be gone for some weeks it was agreed by counsel on both sides, and ordered by the Court, that all further argument in the case shall be by brief; counsel for plaintiff to file brief on or before April 25th, and counsel on the other side to file brief in reply within ten days thereafter.

By the tariff bill submitted by a majority of the Ways and Means Committee, California interests would suffer very severely. Wool, lumber, salt and borax are put upon the free list. This would stop the working of the great borax beds of Inyo county, from which the county now receives a good deal of revenue. The duty on raisins is reduced 25 per cent; this would at once check the raisin business of the State that is so rapidly growing into vast importance. A great deal of capital would soon be interested in raisin growing in Owens valley, and a very large amount of taxable property would soon be created; but this proposed change in the tariff would put an end to all that. It is to be hoped that there may be enough wisdom in Congress to defeat these bad measures.

Surveyor General Hammond says fully a quarter of a million people are traveling through this state looking for homes. The Surveyor also says four millions of acres of land were surveyed some years since by the Government and settled on by honest immigrants, who built homes for themselves and families and who are now informed that, frauds having been discovered in the instigating and conduct of the surveys, the surveys are canceled and that they reside upon unsurveyed land and must practically protect themselves from invasion by the use of arms.

Last Wednesday the Directors of the Irrigation District met at Independence and ordered that an election of a new Board of Directors and other officers be held on April 5th. This is in accordance with the provisions of the Wright Irrigation Law. Nothing at all has yet been accomplished of what was intended by the organization of the district. The present Board does not think it advisable to take any further steps till the Supreme Court shall decide upon the constitutionality of the law.

On examination it will be found that there is hardly a county in any state of the Union but what has some interest that would be injured by the schemes of the tariff tinkers in Congress. No better way can be found for defeating these schemes than for the local papers to impress upon their supporters the effect that would be produced upon local interests by the measures proposed. In this way opposition will be aroused and protests entered from all parts of the Union against those schemes.

The old Stockton Convention fight was renewed at the meeting of the Democratic Committee to select a place for holding the next National Convention. This old quarrel helped to defeat the effort to have the Convention held at San Francisco. The evil some conventions do lives after them; the good of the Stockton Convention—but for further information apply to the editor of the Alta.

Dr. Woodin having been appointed health officer by the Board of Supervisors, is now on a round of visits to all the schools of the county. According to law all school children must be vaccinated, otherwise they will not be allowed to attend school. The Doctor is also ordered to vaccinate all the Indians in the county who have not been vaccinated. The Supervisors are entitled to credit for their efforts to preserve the people from small-pox contagion.

FRONTIER FRIVOLITIES.

The All Night Dance in Which "Ole Virginia Never Tires."

A writer in the American Magazine gives a very felicitous description of a dancing party in the sparsely settled portion of Virginia.

These parties are events of great importance, drawing friends and acquaintances for many miles around. They will come, perhaps from distant counties, a day's journey or more, to participate in the festivities.

The method of travel is "on horseback," and as the roads are bad and frequently bridgeless, the journeying must be accomplished between "sun up" and dark. This would be sufficient reason, if there were no other, for keeping up their merry-making through the entire night, as is the universal custom.

Old and young join in the dancing, which is only suspended for the hearty supper at midnight, and the "sweet supper" as it is called, of cakes, jellies, and tarts, which is furnished just before daybreak.

As the sun rises the visitors mount their horses and start on their homeward journey, perhaps of many hours duration. It seems like paying a severe penalty for a few hours enjoyment, but these tough, hardy settlers do not wilt physically as easily as our modern, hot-house society plants.

In the log-cabin days of the early settlers in the northern states, the all night dance was a common feature of social life, and old and young, for miles around, were participants. They were a hardy race, perhaps because they enjoyed themselves, took plenty of exercise and but little medicine. They enjoyed a rugged old age, because they found medicine for their simple ailments in nature's remedies, the roots and herbs of near-by fields and forests, which cured them, and left no after ill effects.

The people of to-day might be more rugged and enjoy life better if they would have recourse to nature's remedies, instead of mineral drugs. With a purpose of giving them a chance to try this course, H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of Warner's Safe Cure have had prepared, from the best recipes, used in real log cabin days, a line of remedies known as Warner's Log Cabin Remedies, comprising a Sarsaparilla, a Hops and Buchu Remedy, a Cough and Consumption Remedy, an Extract for External and Internal use, Liver Pills, Rose Cream for catarrh, Scalpine for Head and Hair, and a porous Plaster. They are all vegetable compounds, harmless, and just such remedies as were used by our grandmothers with the best effects.

Getting in Some Fine Work.

"And why are you so surprised, Mr. Sampson," she said, drawing herself up with hauteur, "that I play the piano so well?"

"Because your hands are so small, Miss Smith, that you must find it difficult to strike an octave."

Then she played some more for him.—Tid Bits.

An Eye to Business.

"What's the matter?" asked a gentleman, approaching a crowd on the street.

"Man run over by a street car, and leg cut off."

"Heavens!" he said, forcing his way to the prostrate form.

Stooping down, he whispered: "My friend, don't you want a lawyer?"—The Epoch.

About the Same Thing.

A small Hartford child, just home from Sunday school, informed his father that he could name the first five books of the New Testament. They were, he said, "Matthew, Mark, Luke, John and Hatchet," and then, thinking people looked queer, he hesitated and added, "Well, hatchet or ax, it's about the same thing."—Hartford Courant.

Not a Chance to Be Neglected.

Mistress (who has been out)—Why, Bridget, where is the statue of the Venus of Milo?

Bridget (fresh importation)—Wan av them Oitalian image men, mum, came along an' said that he cud fix it as good as new for fifty cents, mum, an' I laved him the job.—New York Sun.

Caught.

He—What will you have, dear, candy or ice cream?

She—No, Edward; get me some pop corn, please.

He—Do you like that stuff?

She—Yes; I like everything that pops.—Harper's Bazar.

Purely a Business Trip.

"What do you suppose Jay Gould crossed the ocean for?"

"Don't know. Maybe he wanted to see how the water was holding out."—Chicago News.

The Lucky Man.

As was announced in last week's Era the sum of $5,000 was won in Benicia at the last drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery. As the holder of the lucky ticket kept the good news to himself hundreds of people have been giving their leisure time in trying to ferret out the fortunate person. On Thursday noon Mr. L. C. Atwood, our City Treasurer and Manager of the Western Union Telegraph office of this place quietly informed the astonished public that he was the holder of the coupon of ticket 8,180 which won the prize of $100,000 in the December drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery, one-twentieth part of the ticket or $5,000 having been received from Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express in hard twenty dollar gold pieces on Thursday evening. A few moments after its arrival Mr. Atwood accompanied by express Agent Durner repaired to his home and presented the money to his wife as a Christmas gift. This was her first news of the happy Christmas in store for her: both herself and husband have taken the matter very coolly. Of the many hundreds of dollars paid out in Benicia for lottery tickets monthly, at last good fortune has visited the home of one deserving family who thoroughly appreciate the gift and will surely make the best of use of it. The unanimous verdict is "I am glad of it as a more deserving family could not have been favored." The New Year begins its career in this home under brighter and happier auspices than they could have dreamed for. The lucky ticket was the fifth one ever purchased by Mr. Atwood.—Benicia (Cal.) New Era, Jan. 4.

A CHINESE RESTAURANT.

THE EXPERIENCES OF A HUNGRY AND INQUISITIVE REPORTER.

No Oriental Luxuries in Sight—A Mysterious Compound Brought to the Table. Two Slices of "Pe-sick-re-aut-i."—A Pot of Delicious Tea.

In Mulberry street, near Canal, amid the noise, bustle and confusion of the busy merchants of the "Bend," there is a quiet and unpretentious dining room. It is presided over at all hours of the day and night by Wah Sing Foo, and the business is said to be a thriving one. Pictures of turtles, pigs, sharks and several kinds of hobgoblins are pasted on the windows and their virtues, as articles of diet, are set forth in choice spider scratches upon pieces of brown paper. The most attractive sign, however, reads as follows: "A good diner 8 cents."

This was sufficient to lure a reporter into the place recently. There were none of the Oriental luxuries in sight. On the walls were a few pictures of flowers, highly colored, and a certificate that Mr. Foo, or some of his friends, had attended a Sunday school. The tables were of pine and partially covered by a ragged material that looked like a cross between a dishcloth and a mop. Mr. Foo was engaged in leveling the sole of his shoe with a hatchet when the reporter entered, and, after glancing up quickly, went on with his work. The reporter dropped carelessly upon a stool and waited. How long the wait would have lasted will never be known. There was a sudden interruption. A pungent odor stole in from the back yard, where something was being cooled. It was too powerful for any nose save a highly cultivated one. The reporter tried to keep it back, but out it came—a double barreled sneeze—that set everything to jingling.

It struck Mr. Foo amidship. The hatchet fell on his foot and the shoe dropped into something which looked like a keg of molasses. There was blood in his eye and there might have been a tragedy, had not the innocent cause of all the commotion put on a hungry look and touched his sunken abdomen with his finger.

THE BEST IN THE HOUSE.

Mr. Foo smiled so that no one could tell whether he was weeping, wailing or gnashing his teeth as he said:

"Wing Foo ah alle go to kiting see bah."

"All right, Mr. Foo. I'll forgive you. Now just set up the best in the house, up to the eight cent limit, and all will be well."

Mr. Foo jumped away with the air of a man who did not understand a word that had been spoken. He kept out of sight for twenty minutes and then appeared with a large bowl of something steaming hot, which he set on the table and then took a seat close by. He began to whistle a peculiar call and the yellowish soup moved restlessly in the bowl. A spoon came with the stuff. It required some courage to take a mouthful, and it would take a team of horses and a derrick to get one up to the rack for a second trial. A mixture of lard, mustard, salt and bilge water may tempt a lagging appetite, but it is just a little surprising to the stomach of a man not thoroughly used to the customs of the Flowery Kingdom. Mr. Foo took the mysterious compound away and came back in a little while with a large platter and a couple of small dishes. There were two slices of some brown material on the platter. Mr. Foo admitted that it was "pe-sick-re-aut-i." There is no doubt that it was the genuine goods. It tasted so. One of the slices was filled with small fish bones, and the other was a dainty morsel which might have been taken, with a little imagination, to be a bit of fried mummy. There were also some beans, cabbage and rice. Mr. Foo evidently runs his place on the touch not and taste not plan. Well—it keeps one from being poisoned. A nibble here and there demonstrated that an ash can would be a safe place for Mr. Foo's "layout." It made it easy to understand why a young Chinaman wears wrinkles and appears like an old man while yet in his teens.

A SMALL POT OF TEA.

Mr. Foo removed the dishes. He wanted to bring some more of the menu, but the reporter indicated that he would prefer a drink of some kind. After a long delay Mr. Foo appeared with a tray bearing a small pot of tea and a cup that resembled a toy. The tea was a revelation. It was aromatic and the flavor delicious, and if there had not been a small family of Croton bugs found in the teapot, after the tea had been swallowed, it would have been thoroughly enjoyable. This ended the dinner.

"Well, Mr. Foo, how much do I owe you?" the reporter asked, simply as a matter of form.

The remark brought back Mr. Foo's cheerfulness, and he came near uncovering his spine with longitudinal extension of his smile. He showed for the first time that his English had not been entirely neglected. After a few marks with a brush, through the wreath of smiles came the words soft and low:

"Sixta-nine-a cen,"

"Sixty-nine cents! Go to, Mr. Foo. You are crazy! Why your sign out there says that you give a good dinner for eight cents. What do you mean by this extortion?"

"Ah! Excus-a-me. Eight cen for poor Chinaman. Melican man richee, no eatee like Chinaman. He eatee blenty soup, beef and good tings. Muchee eatee, muchee pay. Belly good. Sixty-nin-a cen cheapee. Chinaman losee money all time. Belly poor."

The bill was paid, and the visitor came away with the experience and conviction that Mr. Foo had mistaken his calling. He ought to double up with Hungry Joe and do the "hand shaking" act.—New York Tribune.

New Knowledge About Car Couplers.

The idea that it was necessary to have a certain amount of loose play between the cars composing a long train, in order to start the train easily, had become by practice and theory almost as fixed in the minds of railway people as is the geometrical axiom that two parallel lines can never meet. The theory was, by starting one car first, and so gaining a little inertia, then the next car, and so on, it was made possible for an engine to start and haul a long train of a given weight, when, if there were no play, the engine would be stalled and unable to start the train.

But the fallacy of the practice and the theory was conclusively established during the remarkable series of car coupler experiments made by the Master Car Builders' association, at Burlington, Iowa, this year. During these trials it was demonstrated beyond all question that it required less power to start a train with all the couplings tight than to pull the train after the train was put in motion; and the coupler committee came to the conclusion that the coupler of the future ought to be an approved form of the close hook style.—Scientific American.

Destruction by Salt Mining.

The extensive subsidences of Northwich, Eng., according to Mr. Thomas Ward, have no other cause than the pumping of brine for the manufacture of white salt. The upper bed of salt lies beneath about fifty yards of marl; the lower bed, separated from the first by ten yards of marl, is over thirty yards thick. The sinking was first noticed in 1770, a century after the first discovery of salt, and has progressed rapidly since. Much property has been destroyed, and large lakes have been formed—one having an area of 100 acres and all depths up to forty-five feet.—Arkansaw Traveler.

The true Oriental never removes the covering from his head for any length of time. When the turban for any reason becomes oppressive indoors, he changes it for the inevitable fez, or red cap of felt with silver or silken tassel. And if this happens to be taken off from his closely shaven crown, he still adheres to an inner cap of white linen next the scalp. Not even when he prays does he attempt to show his reverence in any of our accustomed ways. Our instinctive removal of our hats as we came in was entirely unappreciated.—Dr. C. S. Robinson.

REMARKS OF A PHYSICIAN.

A Cure for Chapped Lips and a Study of the Cause of Wrinkles.

"As soon as the cold winds begin to blow," remarked a physician, "I am overrun with patients suffering from chapped lips. The trouble generally manifests itself in one wide cut in the middle of the lip. I used to treat such things as a laughing matter and prescribe some simple emollient, such as glycerine, for instance. But I soon found that such treatment was only a temporary remedy, for after partially healing the cut would open at the slightest exertion of the lips. The mere act of biting anything hard, laughing or yawning would make the unfortunate howl with pain. If the patient was addicted to the use of tobacco the chances were that he would have a bad lip all through the winter. In my researches for a permanent cure I ran across an old tramp printer who had rubbed against the rough side of the world all his life, and for whom every season had been a cold day. He told me that if I investigated the matter I would find that the people addicted to chapped lips were in the habit of touching them with their tongues. A sure cure, said he, is to keep your tongue in your mouth. I have since followed his suggestion in my practice and never knew it to fail. The rough skin of the tongue scratches the lips, and when they have once become chapped the least contact is enough to keep the cut open.

"I have recently been making a study of wrinkles," continued the doctor. "It is customary to say that wrinkles come from worrying, but the truth is that most of them come from laughing. This is rather paradoxical, I must admit, but I have been only convinced after the most careful investigation. To know how to laugh is just as important as to know when to do it. If you laugh with the sides of your face the skin will work loose in time and wrinkles will form in exact accordance with what kind of a laugh you have. The man who always wears a smirk will have a series of semi-circular wrinkles covering his cheeks. When a gambler, who has been accustomed to suppressing his feelings, laughs, a deep line forms on each side of his nose and runs to the upper corner of his mouth. In time this line extends to the chin and assumes the shape of a half moon.

"A cadaverous person with a waxlike skin is very apt to have two broadly marked wrinkles, one running up from the jaw and the other under the eye. These meet at right angles at the checkbone and look as though they formed a knot at the apex. The scholar's wrinkles form on his brow, while the scheming politician's come around his eyes, where they look for all the world like the spokes of a wheel. Some of the fat women who bet on horses have the most astonishing crop of wrinkles I ever saw outside of an elephant. One in particular was so strongly marked that whenever she smiled over a big win the wrinkles in each cheek would form themselves in the shape of a perfect pretzel.—New York Evening Sun.

Full Purses and Kind Hearts.

It is not in human nature to be just and humane when robbed of its due experience of life's fundamental conditions. Whatever narrows a man's experience narrows his sympathies, and whatever confers on him irresponsible power tempts him to abuse it. Now, riches do both these things. Whatever exceptional experience they may provide, they certainly withdraw their owners from much that must always enter into the life of the large majority of human kind. These must always anxiously labor and be content with moderate means. Between life conditioned in this way and life free from labor and anxiety there is fixed a gulf which sympathy could hardly cross, even if it would, for it is chained on the one side by pride and on the other by envy.

Sometimes, indeed, if a man has risen to riches by his own efforts, he may so far remember his life of poverty as to retain a certain sympathy for those whom he has left behind him in it; but this is rare, for three reasons: First. Men caring enough for riches to be willing to devote much time to the acquisition of them are usually of a somewhat low, material and unsympathetic nature. Second. In their ascent to riches, after the first few steps, they have to use other men as stepping stones, for no man, unless he have a monopoly talent, like Raphael, can rise to riches otherwise. Nearly all great fortunes are made up of profits caught in labor traps. Such using of other men solely as means leads to forgetfulness that they are ends, hardens the heart and destroys sympathy. Third. Men who have made their own fortunes—self made men, as they are wisely called—have usually a great deal of respect for their maker, and a proportionate contempt for those who, having less cunning than themselves, have remained in the ranks of poverty. Thus it frequently happens that self made men are among the least humane of aristocrats. And the case is even worse with their children and with all persons born to wealth. These lack altogether the experience that would enable them to sympathize with the ordinary, natural human life of labor and narrow means. Raised above it, they cannot comprehend it.—Professor Thomas Davidson in The Forum.

What the Typewriter Is Doing.

The typewriter is creating a revolution in methods of correspondence, and filling the country with active, competent young ladies who are establishing a distinct profession, and bringing into our business offices, lawyers' offices, editorial sanctums, etc., an element of decency, purity and method which is working a perceptible change. The field is widening daily; not from crowding out of their places young men who have been in the habit of claiming a pre-emption for clerical work of all descriptions, but in creating absolutely new positions. The revolution, if it may be called so, has come from the discovery to business men of an ability of which they were unaware until the great convenience and excellent work of the typewriter forced them to it.

The art of dictation is almost a new art, but it is spreading rapidly, and business men are beginning to understand that much of their lives has been wasted in the mere mechanical drudgery of letter writing, and that through employing a competent amanuensis they are now enabled to get off their correspondence with the least possible friction and the smallest amount of time. Whereas, five years ago, the typewriter was simply a mechanical curiosity, today its monotonous click can be heard in almost every well regulated business establishment in the country. A great revolution is taking place, and the typewriter is at the bottom of it.—Penman's Art Journal.

A Million Postage Stamps.

Within the last year hundreds of benevolent people were actually busy begging for canceled stamps in order to obtain admission for an old lady in a Philadelphia "home." A Germantown physician took the matter in charge, and it was understood that when the necessary 1,000,000 had been collected they were to be handed over by his wife to a friend, who was to give them to another friend, who was to give them to a third, who knew some one who would arrange with somebody else for the old lady's final reception. The craze spread so far that packages of stamps arrived by every mail from New York, Washington, Chicago and Boston. Little schoolgirls and fashionable young women vied with each other in their eagerness to aid this good work, and half the requisite number had actually been scraped together before it began to dawn on people's minds that the only possible use that any "home" could make of 1,000,000 stamps would be to sell them for old paper.

Then an enterprising Philadelphia reporter undertook to hunt up the old lady, whose name was Peterman, and having found her, had the pleasure of hearing from her own lips that she had no idea of going into any institution at all.—Harper's Young People.

HAPPY HITS.

In the case of a woman who was tried for killing her husband with a stone, the verdict was rendered that the killing was accidental on the ground that if she intentionally threw the stone at him, it would have hit something in an opposite direction.—The Epoch.

A citizen of Dallas, Tex., has invented an electric fishing line which kills a fish the instant it seizes the hook and at the same time rings a bell on shore to warn the fisherman who may be under a tree some yards distant playing seven up with a brother angler to decide which shall pay for the bait. An attachment that would clean and dry the fish before they are hauled out of the water would prove a great boon to the fisherman and make the inventor's fortune.—Norristown Herald.

The New York Commercial Advertiser says a Buffalo man "dreamed that he had been elected alderman, got up in his sleep, dressed and went to a restaurant, where he treated his dream world supporters to $50 worth of drinks before he woke up." He dreamed, of course, that he had been elected a Buffalo alderman. If he had dreamed that he had been elected a New York city alderman, it is believed that he would gave got up in his sleep, went out and committed suicide before he woke up.—Norristown Herald.

Queen Victoria expected to entertain a few of Buffalo Bill's chiefs at dinner, but when she learned that Holler-a-hole-in-the-air has been known to send his plate back nine times for roast beef and gravy she gave up the idea as being beyond her means.—The Epoch.

Know Thyself, Likewise Thy Hoss.

Farmer Thistlepod sat in the operating chair in the office of the phrenologist. "Your tastes are the tastes of a farmer," said the phrenologist, "and I assume, and in fact am confident, that you are a farmer. You are unready and faltering in speech; you find it difficult to express your ideas. You are sadly deficient in judgment—have no knowledge whatever of human nature; your innocent, confiding disposition renders you an easy prey to designing men, and your own perfect honesty prevents you from suspecting or defrauding any one." Three weeks later the phrenologist bought a nice, quiet, safe, gentle family horse of Farmer Thistlepod. And the farmer sold him a knock kneed old bronco, 22 years old, with a ewe neck, a hot tail and a temper so vicious that the wildest Indian feared it—a horse that had been sold for $27 at two bazars in three weeks—for $375. "It's jest wonderful," said Farmer Thistlepod, as he watched the new horse running away with its new owner, "it's jest wonderful that a man sh'd know so etarnally much about men and not know a thing about hosses."—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

Another Jail Mystery.

Chicago Jailer—What's that?

Prisoner—A barrel of gunpowder.

"My, my! And what's that?"

"A stand of Springfield rifles."

"Mercy on us! What have you in that box?"

"A grand piano."

"It beats all. I don't see how these things were passed in to you. How was it?"

"They blew in."

"Oh, of course! Wonder I did not think of that before. Guard, close the shutters, please."—Omaha World.

P.—Indeed!

M. A.—Sure pop. He understands all about the interstate commerce law.—Boston Courier.

PEACE ON EARTH

Awaits that countless army of martyrs, whose ranks are constantly recruited from the victims of nervousness and nervous diseases. The price of the boon is a systematic course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the finest and most genial of tonic nervines, pursued with reasonable persistence. Easier, pleasanter and safer this than to swash the victualling department with pseudo-tonics, alcoholic or the reverse, beef extracts, nerve foods, narcotics, sedatives and poisons in disguise. "Tired Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep," is the providential recuperant of weak nerves, and this glorious franchise being usually the consequences of sound digestion and increased vigor, the great stomachic which insures both is productive also of repose at the required time. Not unrefreshed awakens the individual who uses it, but vigorous, clear headed and tranquil. Use the Bitters also in fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney troubles, constipation and biliousness.

The most trying position a truthful clergyman can be in is to be preaching the funeral sermon of a man who died rich and mean.

THE BEAUTY OF WOMAN

In her crown of glory. But alas! how quickly does the nervous debility and chronic weakness of the sex cause the bloom of youth to pass away, sharpen the lovely features, and emaciate the rounded form! There is but one remedy which will restore the faded roses and bring back the grace of youth. It is Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," a sovereign remedy for the diseases peculiar to females. It is one of the greatest boons ever conferred upon the human race, for it preserves that which is fairest and dearest to all mankind—the beauty and the health of woman.

Allcock's Porous Plasters are undoubtedly the best external remedy manufactured. I make this assertion to the public from my own personal experience of their wonderful virtues. Suffering from severe pains in my side and chest, contracted through a severe cold, I applied a couple of Allcock's Porous Plasters upon going to bed at night. The result was, that in eight hours after applying them I could get up and walk about with very little pain or ache, when the night previous I could neither get up nor down without help, nor stoop to remove my shoes. I have since used them in my family for various ailments, and have never known them to fail to give almost immediate relief. T. H. BACKUS.

BABY'S Skin, scalp and hair preserved and beautified by the use of CUTICURA SOAP.

When six months old, the left hand of our little grandchild began to swell, and had every appearance of a large boil. We poulticed it, but all to no purpose. About five months after, it became a running sore. Soon other sores formed. He then had two of them on each hand; and as his blood became more and more impure, it took less time for them to break out. A sore came on the chin, beneath the under lip, which was very offensive. His head was one solid scab, discharging a great deal. This was his condition at twenty-two months old, when I undertook the care of him, his mother having died when he was a little more than a year old, of consumption (scrofula of course). He could walk a little, but could not get up if he fell down, and could not move when in bed, having no use of his hands. I immediately commenced with the CUTICURA REMEDIES, using all freely. One sore after another healed, a bony matter forming in each one of these five deep ones just before healing, which would finally grow loose and were taken out; then they would heal rapidly. One of these ugly bone formations I preserved. After taking a dozen and a half bottles he was completely cured, and is now, at the age of six years, a strong and healthy child.

RISING FROM THE GRAVE.

An Incident Which Relieved the Monotony of Camp Life.

When I was in the army during the winter of 1862 we were camped at the upper end of Metairie ridge, some few miles back of Carrollton, La., and some seven or eight from New Orleans. Toward Lake Pontchartrain there was an almost impassable cypress swamp and on the river side wet sloughs. The ridge was from a quarter to a half a mile in width and thickly settled. For what purpose we had been camped there we never knew, unless to try our constitutions in the very hot-bed of malarial production. The men were giving way very fast, so that it was impossible to make out a picket detail without taking men on the sick list.

Just where our regiment was camped the ridge was divided by a bayou, and back of us, across this bayou, was camped probably a thousand contrabands. The blacks were suffering from fevers and other sickness and dying off very fast, although they were thoroughly acclimated under ordinary circumstances. Our picket line was stationed just back of the contraband camp in the edge of the swamp, but what was expected to come through this morass, except alligators and other indigenous animals, is more than we ever found out. Near the post occupying the northwest corner the contrabands buried their dead with all the solemnity and superstition of the African nature. From comrades who had been stationed on this post we had been told of strange occurrences that, in spite of the solemnity such things usually inspire, would convulse us with laughter.

One day after he was relieved, Joe C. S—— told us of an incident that often recurs to me. The ground, as every one knows, on the Mississippi bottoms of Louisiana, is very low, and at any time in a hole dug the water will come very near the surface. It was so with the graves dug by the contrabands; they would immediately fill with water to within a few inches of the top, which made it necessary to put weights on the dead bodies in order to sink them so they could be covered. There was no such thing to be had as coffins, and the burials were made in blankets.

Just before night Joe saw a contraband funeral approaching his post and through curiosity stopped to watch the proceedings. The corpse was laid in the grave and as it would not sink heavy sods taken from the surface were placed on both head and feet. While the body was slowly sinking the venerable white-haired preacher was exhorting the attendants and committing the body, "Dust to dust." Just as they commenced throwing in dirt, up darted the dead body, head first, half way out of the grave, and the last one of them ran away yelling. Joe burst out laughing, as he saw that the weight that had been placed on the head of the body had slipped off and, of course, the buoyancy of the water quickly forced the corpse into an upright position.

It was some time before the negroes could be influenced to return and complete their burial. They believed there was something supernatural about it, and no amount of talking could convince them to the contrary. —Wilber H. Webber, in N. Y. Graphic.

Pipes Again in Fashion.

"Pipe-smoking is on the increase," said a Fulton street tobacconist. "Years ago it was not unusual to meet a half-dozen men pulling on brier-roots during a walk of as many blocks, but until recently the custom has been regarded as vulgar, and Patsey with his dudheen was the only man who braved popular prejudice and sauntered home with a pipe in his mouth. During the past few months it is surprising how many pipes have been sold. Nearly all the old stock is gone, and the manufacturers are smiling at the prospect of a rush for the holidays. The profits are not meager, but of course they are nothing to those we make on cigars. The male portion of New York begins smoking nowadays at the age of seven years, and never quits until death. Cigarettes, or "coffin nails," as some persons call them, are bought by every one. Even young women, school-girls and old women blow a cloud occasionally. We should all get rich if there were fewer in the business. The man who doesn't smoke something nowadays is a rarity."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

He Muzzled the Dog.

"Must I put some muzzle on my dog?" he asked at police headquarters yesterday.

"Well, no; not now."

"Dot's how I belief it was myself. Can I do somethings mit a boy?"

"What for?"

"Vhell, a few days ago a boy comes by my place. My big dog vhas oudt doors. Dot boy half a dog aboudt so high. My dog chaws him oop in two minutes. Dot boy comes in und says if I doan' put some muzzle on my dog he haf him shot."

"I see."

"I puts dot muzzle on. To-day my dog vhas oudt doors. Dot boy comes along mit his shmall dog. When he sees dot muzzle he cries out: 'Seek him, Tiger!' und dot shmall dog licks my big dog until he can't shtand oop no more. Vhas dot some conspiracy or what? Do I half some false pretense on dot boy, or whill he walk aroundt und tell efery body dot it vhas a big shoke on Sayder?"—Detroit Free Press.

COULDN'T REMEMBER.

A Witness With a Memory of the Accommodating Kind.

The getting nothing out of a witness was, perhaps, never better exemplified than in a case at a circuit court in a midland county a few years ago. It had relation to a sale of personalty claimed to have been sold some time previously under an execution, and the plaintiff called a witness to establish the fact of a sale. The cross-examination began by the counsel asking: "Sir, you say you attended the sale on the execution spoken of. Did you keep the minutes of that sale?"

Witness—Don't know, sir, but I did. Don't recollect whether I kept the minutes or the sheriff or nobody. I think it was one of us."

Question—Well, sir, will you tell me what articles were sold on that execution?

Here the witness hesitated, not willing to commit himself by going into particulars, until the patience of the counsel became exhausted and he pressed a special interrogatory.

Counsel—Did you on that occasion sell a threshing-machine?

Answer—Yes, I think we did.

Q.—I wish you to be positive. Are you sure of it?

A.—Can't say that I am sure of it; and when I come to think of it, I don't know as we did; think we didn't.

Q.—Will you swear, then, that you did not sell one?

A.—No, sir, don't think I would; for I can't say whether we did or didn't.

Q.—Did you sell a horse-power?

A.—Horse-power?

Q.—Yes, horse-power.

W.—Horse-power! Well, it seems to me we did. And then it seems to me we didn't. I don't know now as I can recollect whether I remember there was any horse-power there, I can't say whether we sold it or not; but I don't think we did; though it may be, perhaps, that we did, after all. It's some time ago and I don't like to say certainly.

Q.—Well, perhaps you can tell me this: did you sell a fanning-mill?

A.—Yes, sir, we sold a fanning-mill; I guess I am sure of that.

Q.—Well, you swear to that, do you? that one thing, though I don't see it on the list.

A.—Why, I may be mistaken about it; perhaps I am. It may be it was somebody else's fanning-mill, at some other time; not sure.

Counsel (to the court)—I should like to know, may it please the court, what this witness does know and what he is sure of.

Witness—Well, sir, I know one thing that I'm sure of, and that is that on that sale we sold either a threshing-machine or a horse-power or a fanning-mill, or one or all or neither of them, but I don't know which.

The witness was excused from further testimony.—Youth's Companion.

RETURN OF THE BOOT.

A Once Popular Article of Foot-Wear Coming Into Fashion Again.

There are changes in the styles of boots and shoes from year to year, as there are in other fashions. But there are also great revolutions which come around once in a century or so, and which indicate the restlessness of mankind and the eternal laws of change upon which his successful career is projected. It is still within the recollection of the oldest inhabitant, or even, many of his juniors, when boots were worn almost entirely by men and boys. The gradual growth of the taste for shoes will be recalled. Of late years shoes have had the preference. Formerly, in all weathers, the boot was worn outside the trousers, and the delight of the small boy and the pride of the young man in the display of their new boots with red tops brought with it a joy and sense of delicious exultation with which the weary lot of man is not often favored now. For boots, if worn at all, are worn inside and are covered with the legs of the trousers, and the chance for ornamentation, red leather, gilt trimmings, and even gold tassels, which were occasionally worn, is lost to this effete generation. But it is said that the whirligig of time is bringing boots into fashion again, at least for winter wear. This is said to be in the interest of health, which, as all know, is a strong support to any plea for a change. Every body respects the force of the general hygienic principle that it is necessary to keep the head cool and the feet warm, if good health is sought. Boots cover not only the feet, but the ankle and lower leg, and hence fight off rheumatism that delights in attacking those parts. These arguments in favor of boots are reasonable and strong. The sole of a winter boot should be thick, but being thick it is not necessary that it should be heavy. Cork soles are excellent and make a light weighted boot, while protecting the feet from wet. Wool boots are warm, light and pliable, and are becoming great favorites for country wear and riding. But whether a great revolution, which will bring boots into general use again and replace shoes, is impending, may well be questioned. The lightness and pliability of shoes, and the freedom given the use of all muscles by wearing them, is too well appreciated to be given up, and we may safely conclude that while boots will be popular with some, and perhaps with more people than formerly, shoes will lose nothing in the popular favor. Whichever is worn, however, for winter use, let the soles be thick and light. If the feet get wet, put them into cold water, dry them thoroughly, and then, with a change of socks, they will fairly glow with warmth.—Chicago Shoe and Leather Review.

BILL NYE ON J. CÆSAR.

He Makes a Few Interesting Comments on the Play.

The play of "Julius Cæsar," which has been at the Academy of Music this week, has made a great hit. Messrs. Booth and Barrett very wisely decided that if it succeeded here it would do well anywhere. If the people of New York like a play and say so it is almost sure to go elsewhere. Judging by this test the play of "Julius Cæsar" has a glowing future ahead of it. It was written by Gentlemen Shakespeare, Bacon and Donnelly, who collaborated together on it. Shakespeare did the lines and plot, Bacon furnished the cipher and Donnelly called attention to it through the papers.

The scene of "Julius Cæsar" is laid in Rome, just before the railroad was completed to that place. In order to understand the play itself we must glance briefly at the leading characters which are introduced and upon whom its success largely depends.

Julius Cæsar flourished considerably from 100 to 44 B. C., when a committee of representative citizens and property owners of Rome called upon him, and on behalf of the people begged leave to assassinate him as a mark of esteem. He was stabbed twenty-three times between Pompey's Pillar and 11 o'clock, many of which were mortal. This account of the assassination is taken from a localpaper, and is graphic, succinct and lacks the sensational elements so common and lamentable in our own time. Cæsar was the implacable foe of the aristocracy, and refused to wear a plug hat up to the day of his death. Sulla once said, before Cæsar had made much of a showing, that some day this young man would be the ruin of the aristocracy, and twenty years afterward, when Cæsar sacked, assassinated and holocausted a whole theological seminary for saying "eyether" and "nyether," the old settlers recalled what Sulla had said.

Cæsar continued to eat pie with a knife and in many other ways to endear himself to the masses until 68, B. C., when he ran for quæstor. Afterward he was ædile, during the term of which office he sought to introduce a number of new games and to extend the limit on some of the older ones. From this to the senate was but a step.

In 62, B. C., he went to Spain as proprætor, intending to write a book about the Spanish people and their customs as soon as he got back, but he was so busy on his return that he did not have time to do so.

Cæsar was a powerful man with the people, and while in the senate worked hard for his constituents, while other senators were having their photographs taken. He went into the army when the war broke out, and after killing a great many people, against whom he he certainly could not have had anything personal, he returned, headed by the Rome silver cornet band, and leading a procession over two miles in length. It was at this time that he was tendered a crown just as he was passing the city hall, but thrice he refused it. After each refusal the people applauded and encored him till he had to refuse it again. It is at about this time that the play opens. Cæsar had just arrived on a speckled courser and dismounted outside the town. He comes in at the head of the procession, with the understanding that the crown is to be offered him just as he crosses over to the court house.

Here Cassius and Brutus meet, and Cassius tries to make a mugwump of Brutus, so that they can organize a new movement. Mr. Edwin Booth takes the character of Brutus and Mr. Lawrence Barrett takes that of Cassius. I would not want to take the character of Cassius myself, even if I had run short of character and needed some very much indeed, but Mr. Barrett takes it and does it first rate. Mr. Booth also plays Brutus so that old settlers here say it seems almost like having Brutus here among us again.

In act 4 Brutus sits up late reading a story by E. P. Roe, and just as he is in the most exciting part of it the ghost of the assassinated Cæsar appears and states that it will meet him with hard gloves at Philippi. Brutus looks bored, and says that he is in no condition, but the ghost leaves it that way, and Brutus looks still more bored till the ghost goes out through a white oak door without opening it.

At Philippi Brutus sees that there is no hope of police interference, and so before time is called he inserts his sword into his being and dies, while the polite American audience puts on its overcoat and goes out, looking over its shoulder to see that Brutus does not take advantage of this moment, while the people are going away, to resuscitate himself.

Booth and Barrett have the makings of good actors in them. I met both of these gentlemen in Wyoming some years ago. We met by accident. They were going to California and I was coming back. By some oversight we had both selected the same track, and we were thrown together. I do not know whether they will recall my face or not. I was riding on the sleeper truck at the time of the accident. I always take a sleeper, and always did. I rode on the truck because I didn't want to ride inside the car and have to associate with a wealthy porter who looked down upon me. I am the man who was found down the creek the next day gathering wild ferns and murmuring, "Where am I?"

The play of "Julius Cæsar" is one which brings out the meanness and magnetism of Cassius, and emphasizes the mistaken patriotism of Brutus. It is full of pathos, duplicity, assassination, treachery, erroneous loyalty, suicide, hypocrisy and all the intrigue, jealousy, cowardice and deviltry which characterized the politics of fifty years B. C., but which now, thanks to the enlightenment and refinement which twenty centuries have brought, are known no more forever. Let us not forget, as we enter upon the year 1888, that it is a presidential year, and that all acrimony will be buried under the dew and the daisies, and that, no matter how high party spirit may run, there will be no personal enmity.—Bill Nye in New York World.

HISTORICAL TREES.

The Old Liberty Tree—Pope's Weeping Willow—The Charter Oak and Treaty Elm.

The Boston tree that had most of a history was the old liberty tree. At the corner of Washington and Essex streets stands a building in whose wall is inserted a tablet bearing the form of a tree in bas relief. This building covers the ground where the liberty tree grew. The tree was said to have been planted in 1646. A century and a quarter later the sons of liberty held meetings under its branches, and in the days preceding the outbreak of the revolution the ground on which it stood was a place of assembly for the men who conspired to throw off the British yoke. In 1773 an anti-tea party was held beneath it, and it became so obnoxious to the British that in 1775 it was cut down by a detachment of soldiers of the invading army, one of whom was killed.

The poet Pope had sent to him from Smyrna a drum of figs. In it was a small twig, which he stuck in the ground near Twickenham villa. It took root and grew rapidly and was the admiration of himself and his friends, and it proved to be the Salix Babylonica, or weeping willow, and it was the parent of all its kind in England and America. A British officer who came to this country in 1775 brought with him, wrapped in oiled silk, a twig from Pope's willow, intending to plant it himself in American soil. The young officer became acquainted with Custis, Washington's stepson, and he gave him the willow twig. Custis planted it at Abingdon, in Virginia, where it grew vigorously. In 1790 General Gates brought from Abingdon a shoot of the Custis willow and planted it at the entrance gate to his estate on Manhattan Island, and it was known as Gates' weeping willow.

The charter oak of Hartford, Conn., was estimated to be about six hundred years old when Hooker laid the foundation for a commonwealth there. It was at one time known as Wyllys's tree, as it stood in front of the house occupied by Hon. Samuel Wyllys. It measured twenty-six feet in circumference a foot from the ground. The cavity in which the charter was placed on the night of October 31, 1687, was near the root and large enough to admit a child. The cavity gradually became smaller, until it would scarcely admit a hand. The oak was prostrated in August, 1854, and nearly every particle of it was worked into some pleasing form and cherished as a memento of a singular incident in colonial history.

The treaty tree was a large elm which stood on the banks of the Delaware river, near what is now known as Kensington precinct, Philadelphia. It was under this tree that William Penn formed his treaty with the Indians in 1682. Voltaire said "it was the only treaty between these nations and the Christians which was never sworn to and never broken." The tree then became an object of interest and veneration, and when Penn contemplated making his permanent home in Pennsylvania he tried to purchase the land near the tree, considering it one of the finest situations on the river. The tree was long protected with care, but was at last blown down in a gale on March 3, 1810. It was found to be 283 years old, and its trunk measured twenty-three feet in circumference. The Penn Society erected a monument, with proper inscriptions, upon its site. —Chicago News.

How to Market Poultry.

No matter how good poultry you may have, if you don't kill and dress it in good shape and send it to market in attractive style the chances are strongly in favor of your getting only a second-rate price. Kill the fowls in a way so they will not get bruised or soiled by dirt or blood. Dry pick them, on no account scalding before picking. Dress neatly, which means draw the intestines, emptying the gizzard of its contents and keeping every speck of blood or filth from coming in contact with the flesh or skin. Cut off the head, leaving the neck only moderately long. Sever the wings at the outer joint, have the legs picked clean to the knee joints, singe the hairs from the body, being careful not to discolor it by smoke, wind each bird about the wings in strips of white, clean cotton cloth, pack in nice, clean boxes, with rye straw between the layers of poultry, laying the birds upon their backs with legs extended. Don't attempt to palm off fowls for chicks, for grocerymen who haven't their eye teeth cut don't tend stalls in our city markets, and be sure such tricks will cost more than they will net in the long run.—Farm and Home.

—Noodles are delicious served in any consomne soup, or as a vegetable. Break a good-sized egg into a bowl, stir into it about a half cupful of flour and a teaspoonful of salt. Work this till it is smooth, and turn out on a kneading board and knead it well till it is firm, elastic dough. Roll this out till it is as thin as a wafer. Let it dry about an hour. Roll it up in small rolls, cutting off the end to form little curls of paste. Put three cupfuls of noodles in about two quarts of stock and cook rapidly for half an hour. Skin them out and serve in a cream sauce, or mixed with half cupful of bread crumbs fried brown. If they are cooked in stock, the stock should be seasoned and served for a dinner soup.—Toledo Blade.

—A few inexpensive changes in the barn and stable arrangements might save you much time and labor in the course of a year. Get out the plans this winter and do the work next spring.

NATIONAL ANTHEMS.

When and by Whom They Were Written and Set to Music.

There never was a more rousing composition than "La Marseillaise." "The sound of it," says Carlyle, "will make the blood tingle in men's veins, and whole armies and assemblages will sing it with eyes weeping and burning, with hearts defiant of death and despot." It had a great share in the first French revolution, for in a few months after it was first made known every one was singing it, and the words "To arms! March!" were resounding in all parts of France. At every season of disorder since its strains have excited the passions of the people, and if immortality can be predicted for any tune known to man this is, beyond a question, the one. And yet, as the story goes, both words and music were the production of one night. They were composed in 1792 by a person whom Carlyle calls "an inspired Tyrtæn Colonel," Rouget de Lisle, who was still living when Carlyle's "French Revolution" was first published. The scene of its birth was Strasburg, and not Marseilles, but it was a force of Marseillaise which first marched to it, and hence the title.

The origin of the British national anthem has proved a source of uninterrupted vexation for many years past. There is almost as much mystery regarding it as there used to be about the sources of the Nile. The common account attributes it to Dr. Bull, King James I's organist, but it has also been claimed for Henry Carey, the author of "Sally in Our Alley." Between these two the authorship and composition almost certainly rest, but it has been found impossible to decide definitely for the one or the other. The music of "God Save the Queen" is tame and uninteresting, but it agrees well with the comparatively peaceful, regular course of events which has marked public affairs in England for over two hundred years past.

The Russian national anthem, "God Protect the Czar," was first performed at the Grand Theater, Moscow, in December, 1833. Previous to this there had been no national hymn in Russia, and the czars usually contended themselves with "God save the King." The composer was Colonel M. Lwoff, and in return for the composition the Czar Nicholas presented him with a gold snuff box, set with diamonds. The music is distinctly national, but the words, as every one knows, are any thing but the actual prayer of the Russian people—"God Save the Czar! Mighty Autocrat! Reign for our glory," etc. It is properly speaking, an official hymn, and is unknown to the vast majority of Russians.

The Austrian national anthem is well known in England from its use as a hymn tune. It was composed by Haydn and performed for the first time at the celebration at the birthday of the Emperor Franz at Vienna in 1797. The lovely air is thoroughly German, and found therefor a ready acceptance in the hearts of the people. Haydn himself was very fond of it. He used it in the variations in one of his quartets, and when he was dying he insisted on being taken from bed to the piano, when he played the air three times over very solemnly in the presence of his weeping servants.

The Danish national anthem is not unlike the "Rule Britannia." It was composed by a German named Hartmann, about the year 1770. The "Sicilian Mariner's Hymn," though it can hardly be called a national anthem, is a favorite air with the gondoliers of Venice, who sing it frequently.—Chicago News.

CARE OF THE EARS.

Twelve Rules That It Would Be Well to Remember.

1. Never put any thing into the ear for the relief of toothache.

2. Never wear cotton in the ears if they are discharging pus.

3. Never attempt to apply a poultice to the inside of the canal of the ear.

4. Never drop any thing into the ear until it has been previously warmed.

5. Never use any thing but a syringe and warm water for cleansing the ears from pus.

6. Never strike or box a child's ears, this has been known to rupture the drum-head and cause incurable deafness.

7. Never wet the hair if you have any tendency to deafness; wear an oiled silk cap when bathing and refrain from diving.

8. Never scratch the ears with any thing but the finger if they itch. Do not use the head of a pin, hairpins, pencil tips or any thing of that nature.

9. Never let the feet become cold and damp, or sit with the back toward the window, as these things tend to aggravate any existing hardness of hearing.

10. Never put milk, fat, or any oily substance into the ear for the relief of pain, for they soon become rancid and tend to incite inflammation. Simple warm water will answer the purpose better than any thing else.

11. Never be alarmed if a living insect enters the ear. Pouring warm water into the canal will drown it, when it will generally come to the surface, and can be easily removed by the fingers. A few puffs of tobacco smoke blown into the ear will stupefy the insect.

12. Never meddle with the ear if a foreign body, such as a bead, button or seed enters it; leave it absolutely alone, but have a physician attend to it. More damage has been done by injudicious attempts at the extraction of a foreign body than could ever come from its presence in the ear.—Philadelphia Call.

OF GENERAL INTEREST.

—A good deal of money is taken in by the penitentiary authorities at Columbia, S. C., by charging visitors ten cents for showing them through the institution. The money is used in transporting released prisoners to their homes, if they have any. Eighty dollars was taken in one day recently.

—An Oshkosh man who has been out to Portland, Oregon, states that he was almost eaten up with fleas at that place. So troublesome were they night and day that he could neither sleep nor rest, and when he complained about the annoyance the natives laughed at him and told him that they did not notice them at all.

—People living along the line of the New Jersey Central make objection to the use of soft coal by the road, as they say that the soot settles on the windows, door-heads and water-conductors of all houses near the track; but the company has been driven to the use of the bituminous kind in consequence of the long strike in the anthracite region.

—If Captain Baudry, of the steam whaler Orca, San Francisco, sticks to his resolution to retire from business he will retire in a blaze of glory. On his cruise just ended he killed thirty-five whales, stowed twenty-eight (all he had room for), and brought into port 2,800 barrels of oil and 48,000 pounds of bone—the largest catch on record, and valued at about $268,888.

—The Kingston (N. M.) Shaft says: "Gold is where you find it," has passed into an adage. Armstrong, the blacksmith, bought some Kansas ducks several months ago. His mother came to visit him a few days ago. He killed a duck in honor of the occasion. The old lady had heard of gold being found in duck and chicken gizzards, and she had the curiosity to try the duck, and was rewarded by finding a little nugget of gold.

—Many artesian wells spout water under a heavy pressure, just as many gas-wells find the gas under a heavy pressure of several hundred pounds to the square inch. This water-power is used in many places in France by means of turbine wheels, and it is probable that even the gas pressure might in some cases also be utilized. In very deep artesian wells the heat of the water is also utilized.—Boston Budget.

—Mexican editors complain of the arrest in Texas of some of the countrymen for violating the Congressional enactment against the importation of laborers under contract, claiming that the Mexicans crossed the Rio Grande at the request of American farmers and planters to assist them in their harvest, as has been customary for years, and that, although paid for their services, they were not in competition with any American workmen.

—India silk robes for babies! It sounds odd, but as the silk is made up rather simply and is not very costly the babies must find it a pleasant exchange for the stiff, rough, white embroidery in which many of them have been lapped. The fancy for using this material comes at an odd moment, just when some women are making a merit of not letting their little girls wear silk at all, but dressing them in woolen in winter and muslin and gingham in summer.

—The recent introduction by Faber, in Germany, of pencils for writing upon glass, porcelain and metals, in red, white or blue, is worth noting. The composition consists of melting together four parts of spermaceti, three of tallow and two of wax, to which are added six parts of either red lead, white lead or Prussian blue, according to the color desired. The mass thus prepared is turned out in the usual form of sticks, and is then ready for use. The marks are easily rubbed out when desired, and save all labeling.

—A novelty of the Upper Thames is a launch which owes its motive power to the explosive vapor of some hydrocarbon such as petroleum. The vessel is of American origin, and is the first to use a petroleum engine in Great Britain. The boat is started by the act of lighting a lamp, and the lamp must be extinguished to stop the engine. The fuel costs much less than would the coal necessary for the same amount of work. The omission of a boiler saves much space, while neither fireman nor working engineer is required.—Arkansaw Traveler.

—The schooner M. A. Boston recently brought to Gloucester from La Have banks a most peculiar sea monster, unlike any thing ever seen by the oldest fisherman there. It was four feet long and five inches thick; had one dorsal fin extending the whole length of its back, and a triangular-shaped head, the lower jaw extending two inches beyond the upper. Both jaws are armed with very sharp teeth. The upper jaw had three long prongs at the extreme tip. This queer fish will be sent to the Smithsonian Institute.—Boston Budget.

—Palouse City has one hundred inhabitants, and the Portland Oregonian says that it has the following business houses: Three merchandise stores, drug store, two hardware stores, millinery, three implement and machine stores, harness and saddlery store, two livery stables, hotel, restaurant and lodging house, barber shop, meat market, two blacksmith shops, wagon shop, society hall, furniture store, two printing offices, two saloons, two law offices, land company's office, sash and door factory, brewery, real estate office, two sawmills, post-office, variety store, photograph gallery, jewelry store, one washhouse and three more under construction, and three vacant store buildings newly constructed.

—Queen Victoria keeps always in her private apartment a statuette of the lamented John Brown, which goes wherever the Queen herself travels. Its usual place is on her private writing desk.

—Lord Salisbury recently sold his property between the Thames embankment and the Strand for one million dollars. By the growth of house property in London he is now one of the richest men in England.

—General McIves, a well-known character in New York, has served under many flags. He was a soldier for the British East India Company, the Southern Confederacy, the Argentine Republic, the Cretan, Japanese, Egyptian and Turkish Governments. He was also in the Franco-Prussian war as a French staff officer.

—On pleasant mornings General Sheridan's four children accompany him to his office at the War Department, at Washington. The quartette of little girls wear scarlet dresses, wraps and hats, and thus dressed alike in a costume as striking as it is becoming they form a most interesting escort to the famous warrior.

—David L. Boker left New York for the West about twelve years ago to seek his fortune. He found it. He reached Colorado with one dollar and fifty cents in his pocket. After a time he became interested in a silver mine, made one hundred thousand dollars in a short time, and has been enlarging his fortune ever since. He is a tall, handsome man, and is now in the East for the first time in years seeking rest and amusement.

—Ludwig Knaus painted on one canvas the family of the Russian financier Strousberg, who became bankrupt some time ago. The picture has drifted to Paris, where the dealer who owns it proposes to cut out the several figures and sell them separately. Paintings by Knaus bring extraordinary prices. Further gossip is to the effect that the children of Strousberg have offered three or four thousand dollars to save the family group from disruption.

—One of the Holborn (London) Board of Poor Guardians has resigned because of the board's extravagance. He said he could not remain in an organization that paid ten pounds for a carpet for the clerk's room, forty-eight pounds for a carpet for the board-room, thirty pounds for curtains and twelve pounds for poles, while there were so many starving poor in London. The other guardians of the poor were very indignant and accepted his resignation at once.

—Barber (to countryman in chair)—"You don't get shaved very often, I guess, sir?" Countryman—"Don't git shaved often! I cum to town onct a month, mister, an' b'gosh, I get shaved every time I cum!"

—"Oi say, Mike!" "Phwat?" "Where be's ye wurrukin'?" "Not wurrukin' at all. I be's conductohr on a dihrt cart. Where be's ye wurrukin'?" "Not wurrukin' at all. I be's superintendhent of a brick elevatohr at the new hotel."—Brift.

—"Poor fellow!" said a bystander, looking compassionately at a poor Irishman whose leg had been mangled by a street car, "it will have to be amputated." "Amputated, is it?" exclaimed the Irishman, scornfully, "it'll be cut off!"—Texas Siftings.

—A few mornings since at breakfast, in a rich Clifton home, a little tot paralyzed his maternal progenitor by exclaiming: "Mamma, I love you better than I love oatmeal." "Do you love that much, dear?" was the tender rejoinder. "Well, I ain't stuck on it."—Cincinnati Telegram.

—"I declare!" exclaimed Mrs. Fogg, as she vainly endeavored to dissect the turkey, "if you aren't the poorest man to do marketing. This turkey's old as Methuselah." "Possibly," replied Fogg, unabashed, "but my dear, it is a female bird, and courtesy to the sex prevented me from inquiring about her age."—Boston Transcript.

—Justifiable Pride.—Husband (complacently)—"I did something to-day which I think no man ever did before." Wife—"What was that, John?" Husband—"You know how muddy the streets were after the rain?" Wife—"Yes." Husband—"Well, I turned the bottom of my trousers up before they got soaked through."—N. Y. Sun.

—First Director blind asylum—"My friend Blinks is out of a job, an' I'd like to do something for him." Second Director—"What's his biz?" "He's a sign painter. He's got left on two hundred grocery store mottoes an' wants to sell 'em." "All right, we'll make an appropriation to buy 'em for the blind asylum. What does the mottoes say?" "'If you don't see what you want, ask for it.'"—Omaha World.

LIGHT AND AIRY.

A Great Problem.

There are problems in arithmetic
That pale a fellow's gills,
And algebraic corkers
And geometric pills,
But the toughest of all problems,
That with dread a husband fills,
Is to buy the earth "at special sale"
For two small $ bills.
—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Change of Base.

Kansas City Reporter—I have an account of a fellow guilty of all sorts of brutalities which ought to send him to the penitentiary for life.

Able Editor—Write him up and I'll demand of the authorities their reason for not arresting him. Who is he?

"Mulligan, the three card monte sharp."

"Eh? That slugger who licked the three editors across the way?"

"The same."

"Remember the golden rule, my boy, 'Deal gently with the erring.'"—Omaha World.

A Christmas Carol.

We loathe, abhor, detest, despise
The man who does not advertise.
And when he finds after New Year's
Enough to justify his fears
That he laid in too large a stock,
That to his store folks didn't flock,
And half his goods are still on shelf,
He'll loathe, detest, despise himself.
—Lowell Courier.

A Good Yearly Average.

"But, Mr. Superintendent, you will admit, I suppose, that your street cars are outrageously cold?"

"Well, yes, in winter they are pretty cold, of course, but you ought to be willing to take a reasonable view of the matter."

"Reasonable view?"

"Why, certainly. Now, if you should put a thermometer in our cars and leave it there the year round you would find that with the 110 degrees above zero in the summer and the 10 degrees below zero in the winter we strike a pretty good average in the entire year."—Buffalo News.

The Inevitable End.

Although he covets it from birth,
And covets it through life's brief span,
Man never, never gets the earth,
It is the earth that gets the man.
—Boston Courier.

A Lover of Candor.

Impecunious Man—I wish you would be so kind as to lend me $5. I'll pay you back in a few days. Candid Friend—If you had asked me for the loan in a candid and straightforward manner I would have lent you the money, but asking me in the way you did causes me to distrust you. "I don't understand you." "You asked me to be so kind as to lend you $5." "Yes." "If you had been candid you would have said to me: 'Be so stupid, be such an ignominious ass, such a hopeless idiot, as to lend me $5,' and you might have got it."—Texas Siftings.

A Traveled Man.

Mr. Overtherhine (a Cincinnati drummer)—Yes, I've been an extensive traveler, Miss Waldo. For the past ten years I don't believe I have spent more than one month out of the twelve at home.

Miss Waldo (a young lady from Boston)—Oh, I think traveling is so interesting, and it improves one so much, you know. You have visited Paris, Mr. Overtherhine.

Mr. Overtherhine—No, we have another man for Kentucky; my route all lies north of the Ohio river.—New York Sun.

The Cigarette.

I am only a small cigarette,
But my work I will get in, you bet,
For the stern coffin maker
And grim undertaker
Will declare I bring fish to their net.
—Boston Budget.

Science Is Everything.

Young Mr. Wabash (of Chicago)—Are you interested at all in matters of a scientific nature, Miss Waldo?

Miss Waldo (of Boston)—Oh, very much, Mr. Wabash!

Mr. Wabash—You think, then, that every one should possess some knowledge of science?

Miss Waldo—Yes; I attribute much of our Mr. Sullivan's phenomenal success to his scientific ability.—The Epoch.

Good Taste Misplaced.

Fair Visitor (to convict in for life for murdering his grandmother)—There is a bunch of sweet violets for you, sir. Have you anything to complain of?

Convict—Well, yes, Miss. I'm a very tall man, as you see, and this striped suit unpleasantly emphasizes my stature. I ought to have something in a pronounced check.—The Epoch.

Fashion Note.

A sacrificing wife is dear,
Her husband well should prize her,
But the best wife this time o' year
Is a sealskin sacrificer.
—Detroit Free Press.

All Up With Him.

Wife—I am afraid, my dear, that Clara's quarrel with young Mr. Sampson is a very serious matter.

Husband—Nonsense; they will be as devoted as ever in a few days.

Wife—No, John, I think you are mistaken. No girl will quarrel with her lover just before Christmas unless there are good and sufficient reasons for it.—New York Sun.

Of Not Much Interest.

Lady (to husband)—You don't tell me, John, that eleven cities were overflown and millions of people left homeless and starving?

Husband—Yes, in China.

Lady (disappointed)—Oh, in China. Interesting matters of that kind always happen such a provokingly long distance away!—New York Sun.

Live in the Present.

"Live, live today!" the sage has said;
The present's ours, the future isn't;
Regret not Christmases now fled;
Content be with the "Christmas present."
—Boston Courier.

A Misunderstanding.

Father (who has given his consent)—I hope, young man, that you know the value of the prize you will get in my daughter?

Young Man—Well—er—no, sir; I don't know the exact value, but as near as I can find out it's in the neighborhood of $50,000.—New York Sun.

St. Nicholas and Culture Clash.

American Youth (aged 6)—Now if the effect of eighty bolts of electricity is equal in applied force to——

Santa Claus—Holy Grail! is this the youngster that I've brought a yellow monkey on a red stick for?—Judge.

And He Gets It.

When ice is thick and deep's the snow,
And winter days are drear O;
Man wants but little here below
Zero. —Boston Courier.

Ruby I. Paradise is the name of a postmaster at Concordia, Kan.

A single day of heavy fog makes the city of London pay £40,000 more for gas.

The Russian government is pushing a railroad across Siberia with great energy.

The United States sends 1,000,000 barrels of apples every year to foreign countries.

Fifteen young Moors from Morocco have gone to Italy to study in the military colleges.

A German tourist has just encircled the globe at a cost of £180, and the voyage took 185 days.

A social philosopher foresees the day when the primary school desk will be supplied with typewriters instead of writing books.

Sir John Lubbock, in his lecture on "Savages," says that the negroes never kissed until they were taught by the white people.

Queen Victoria is going to institute an order of literary merit, consisting of twenty knights, fifty knights' champions and 100 champions.

China has at the present time 1,500 temples to the honor of Confucous, at which 62,600 pigs, rabbits, sheep and deer, and 27,000 pieces of silk are offered annually.

The largest electric light in the world is in the lighthouse at Sydney, Australia. It has the power of 180,000 candles, and can be seen at sea fifty miles distant. America's largest light, 24,000 candle power, is at San Jose, Cal.

A butter dealer recently sold a quantity of bad butter at a residence in Indianapolis. When he next returned he was invited in. He entered and was seized by the inmates, stripped of all his clothing, and buttered from head to foot with his rancid wares.

The petrified remains of a huge monster have been discovered near Knoxville, Iowa. The body was between fifty and sixty feet long, with a head almost four feet long and two and a half feet wide, with four eyes. The sockets of the eyes are eight inches in diameter.

A manufacturer in New York state is engaged in drafting a design for a car to be made entirely of wood pulp. It will be light, cheap and indestructable by fire or collision. If it should be thrown off the track it would simply bound into the air and settle down into its place.

Sebastian Muller, a Swiss, lately arrived in New Haven, Conn., is astonishing the Yankees with his feats of strength. He is 25 years old, 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighs a pound and a half less than 200, is magnificently developed as to muscle, and can break a six-inch cobble stone with one blow of his fist.

Of the 1,406 students of Michigan university, it is stated by President Angell that the parents of 502 were farmers; 171 merchants; 93 lawyers; 83 physicians; 52 manufacturers; 54 mechanics, and 51 clergymen. He estimates that as many as 45 per cent. belonged to the class who gained their living by manual toil.

Kangaroo leather has become so decidedly popular for shoes that 6,000 skins are recieved and tanned in Newark, N. J., alone each week. But that means most of the skins used, for they are sent all over the world from the Jersey tanneries. One result is that kangaroo hunters in Australia are making money. They get 70 cents a pound for skins, and some of them clear from $2,000 to $5,000 a year.

A San Francisco justice of the peace formulated an oath for a Chinese witness like the following: "I swear by the Chinese gods, foreigners' god, the God of heaven and earth, that if I am a liar in this case my head will be cut off the same as this chicken's head is cut off, and that I will be drowned in the ocean and never get back to China," and while repeating the oath the Chinaman held a cleaver in his hand, with which he severed a chicken's head from the body when he finished the words.

TEA TABLE TALK.

Lamp shades to hold photographs on glass are seen, but can never become generally popular.

Roman lamps on an antique stand furnish the very latest illumination in milady's hallway.

Small clocks that play some familiar tune every hour are among the holiday goods now on exhibition.

The old blue chinaware of our ancestors is still in demand, and, of course, is promptly made to order.

Fine pillows are now carried by some railway travelers, who make it a rule to sleep half the journey.

Some of the imported India shawl wraps are lined with fur, which means they are to be worn all winter.

No gentleman who would be properly dressed tolerates a black braid down the side of dress suit trousers.

Silver picture frames, instead of gilt, are increasing in favor, and several are seen at the Academy of Design.

Amber holders and handles for champagne bottles are a Parisian wrinkle some Americans have "brought over."

Lion, tiger, leopard and other animal rugs are seen in greater variety than ever, and since Barnum's fire may possibly be a trifle cheaper.

It is to be noted that the wearing of wigs is growing in favor among the women of Vanity Fair, with some of whom it may be a necessity.

Some gentlemen have revived the fob for evening dress, and the jewelers have put forth some new designs described as "quiet and elegant."

It looks now as if buttoned shoes for men had had their day, and that the laced footwear would "obtain" more extensively even than heretofore.

The Derby hat is by no means crowded out of fashionable sight by the square top affair, to which the middle aged man can scarcely reconcile himself.

Men's collars are high again and open about half an inch in front. It is announced that it is intended they should be seen above the overcoat collar.

BASEBALL TALK.

Mike Kelly is making lots of money in the Golden state this winter.

Getzein wants $5,000 or nothing to sign with the Detroits for 1888.

Mobile is taking active steps to organize a team for the Southern league.

The statement going the rounds that Cleveland lost $19,000 this year is denied by those who should know best.

Kansas City is far ahead of its eastern friends. It is now playing baseball on roller skates, and it takes immensely.

Should Indianapolis get Fred Pfeffer, it will have a great infield in Esterbrook, Pfeffer, Denny and Glasscock. It could not easily be beaten.

John Sherman is said to be worth $1,500,000.

Senators Stanford, of California, and Stockbridge, of Michigan, turn over all their salaries to the clerks of their committees.

Senator Stewart, of Nevada, when in the senate before, was one of the most liberal entertainers in Washington. His fortune was much larger then than it is now, yet he spends money with the same freedom that characterized him then.

Ex-Senator Dorsey, Senator Windom and Jesse R. Grant are at the head of a great syndicate which has purchased the Moore-Benjamin iron mines in the Gogebic range, in Wisconsin. The price paid for the mines and surrounding lands was more than $3,000,000.

President Cleveland has accepted an invitation to be the guest of the Society of the Constitutional Centennial at a dinner in Philadelphia on Jan. 25.

Oscar Wilde's baby is the image of its beautiful mother. Mrs. Wilde's reception dresses are always designed by her husband, but she objects to his taste in bonnets.

M. Grevy's age is a disputed matter, and the ex-president himself does not know. One authority says he was born in 1813, another in 1807, and Vaperau gives 1820.

One of the handsomest residences on Chicago's fashionable Michigan avenue is occupied by George Hankins, the noted gambler. It is of imposing appearance, is finished with elegance and taste and is one of the first private houses pointed out to strangers.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Janauschek leaves for Europe in February.

"A String of Onions" is the rather unpropitious title of a new comedy.

The Wagner performances at Baireuth next year will continue from July 22 to Aug. 18.

Mr. George H. Jessup, a graduate of Trinity college, Dublin, is writing a new play for Mrs. Langtry.

Joseph Jefferson closes his present tour Dec. 24, and goes to his New Iberia, La., plantation for his usual winter rest.

The managers of cheap theatres the country over are said to be getting rich, although most of them give shockingly bad shows.

Lew Dockstader has made definite arrangements for a four months' trip to San Francisco of his minstrel organization in May next.

Robert G. Hilliard, now out of a situation because of his quarrel with Mrs. Langtry, has decided to appear as an elocutionist for a time.

Arthur B. Chase, the director of the Edwin Booth-Lawrence Barrett company, says that the profits of the tour thus far have averaged $15,000 per week.

TAKE SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

For all Diseases of the Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Spleen.

This purely vegetable preparation, now so celebrated as a Family Medicine, originated in the South in 1828. It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. L. M. HINTON, M. D., Washington, Ark.

Mrs. Burgess, of Bishop Creek, was in town last Tuesday.

Peach and apricot trees have bloomed out rapidly during the past week.

The band boys will have a good attendance at their ball Monday night.

Several fine showers fell during the week. It rained nearly all night Wednesday.

Dr. Woodin has been down at Olancha the last day or two on a vaccination visit.

The Indians are no longer allowed to travel on the cars at least till they shall all be vaccinated.

Improvements to the value of $10,000 will be made this spring on the fair grounds at Reno.

John Alexander is at Darwin; he spent a week or so at Panamint before coming back to Darwin.

Irwin's new weighing platform beats guessing all to smash; it is better for both buyer and seller.

A neat fence has been put up around the Court house grounds, now trees and shrubbery can be planted.

Bert. has invented an instantaneous way of making omelette; it needs to be improved however, by leaving out the egg shells.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell arrived at Independence last Monday from Benton. Mr. Russell is attending to mining interests.

Many Democrats of Bishop Creek who came to Independence lately are talking of Supervisor Eldred as their next candidate for Sheriff.

There will be a song service at the M. E. Church at 7 o'clock Sunday evening. Sunday school at 11 a. m. Everybody welcome.

Mr. Frank P. Blaisdell, of Round Valley, has gone an a visit to San Buenaventura where he has relatives. He will be gone about a month.

Mr. C. Anthony, of Darwin, arrived at Independence last Monday. He left next morning for San Francisco and expects to be gone several weeks.

The coming summer will be the busiest season Inyo county has known in many a year, and so far as real progress goes, the best the county has ever had.

Mr. A. Davidson, who has been confined to his room at the Norman House for several months by illhealth is again able to get outdoors, though still quite weak.

The run of ore at the R ley mill was finished and all cleaned up about ten days ago. Mr. Anthony appeared to be satisfied with the result, though not inclined to talk about it.

Messrs. Keogh, Hall, Sterling and Mead, all of Bishop Creek, were in town at the beginning of the week. They were at the Land Office making final proof on land locations.

Mr. James Jenkins has bought the place lately owned by John Rittgers near Lone Pine. Mr. Rittgers left Lone Pine last Monday for Los Angeles, going by way of Mojave.

The people of Lone Pine have subscribed money to get machinery to try for artesian water. G. P. Rixford, of San Francisco, and other locators have pledged themselves to support the project.

Nathan R. Vail was drowned at Redondo, Los Angeles county on Tuesday of last week by the upsetting of a boat in the breakers. The deceased was father of the Vail Brothers, of Churchill, Nevada.

Rev. Mr. Sisson, agent for the Bishop Creek Academy, sent an order to Michigan a few days ago for seven hundred trees for the Academy grounds. The order includes varieties of ornamental and forest trees.

Ike Wilmot arrived in town from Panamint on Thursday. He says the camp is prosperous; the mill is working well. There are not pack trains enough to keep up the supply of fuel; but there is plenty of ore.

This is the second season since J. C. Irwin had a lot of large peach tree stumps in his yard grafted. List year the grafts made great growth and this year they are as full of blooms as they possibly can be.

A new paper called the Fruit Grower has been started in San Francisco. It will be devoted to the fruit interests of the State. Subscription price, $3 per year. Address B. N. Rowley, 121 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Strangers who are interested in Owens valley could not choose a better time than the present to visit the country. They would now see everything at its very worst, and that is what every intending settler should see.

A good attendance was drawn out by the temperance lecture delivered by Rev. T. E. Sisson at Bishop Creek last Saturday evening. The audience gave a very respectful hearing and were much interested from beginning to end.

A gymnasium has been fitted up at the Bishop Creek Academy. It will be furnished with the usual appliances, including ladders, trapeze, inclined bar, suspended rings, boxing gloves, dumb bells, Indian clubs, etc.

No end of abuse is heaped upon Sullivan for his miserable fizzle with Mitchell. It is alleged that since he went to England he has been keeping the worst of company, both men and women; that he is physically ruined and that his career as a prize fighter is over.

Last Sunday afternoon the Independence Band gave an open air concert in the square at the center of town. The music was sweet and pleasing; being a most agreeable change from the rasping, discordant, nerve torturing noises of a few months ago. It is intended to give a similar concert on each alternate Sunday.

Mr. J. H. Crockwell, the photographer will be at Independence soon. His studio is furnished with the latest improvements in the photographic art. If likenesses are not satifactory money refunded. For enlarging, small pictures taken free of cost. Mr. T. Pettit is agent for orders for enlarged work.

A Specimen Letter.

The following letter is one of several received lately on the subject of artesian wells. It will serve to show the interest that is taken in this matter by land locators. The writer of this lives in a distant part of the State.

MR. MULHOLLAND: Dear Sir:—I did not pay the tax assessed to me on land that I may never get title to, and I note by your last paper that there were no bidders to buy in the property. It is not my intention to shirk the tax, but it does not seem to me to be a just tax At the same time I do not want to lose any opportunity of proving up if I am ever able to do so. I note a very sensible article in your last paper about artesian wells. If you had some man capable of boring wells who would form a joint stock company as you suggest, and have all parties interested take stock, I will subscribe for stock in such corporation to buy tools to start into the business, providing a competent man could be found to put in some money and manage the concern. As a starter the company could bore one or two wells with their own capital for a test; and they could probably arrange to bore an experimental well, the owner to pay the cost of the well if water should be found. The main trouble is to get started and make the test. If water were found there would be plenty of business for the company. I appreciate the fact that something must be done at once and am heartily in favor of any feasible project. If a company is started I will take $200 worth of stock, or I will give $100 outright toward boring an experimental well on my location. If possible I will visit your place this spring and would like to know the best time to go and the expense and time necessary to reach there. Yours Truly,

Don't Spoil Two Pairs

Some one, probably an Indian, carried away a pair of boots from the store of E. Chenot recently. The taker was doubtless in a hurry, and failed to notice that the boots did not match. This left a pair with Mr. Chenot that don't match. Now if the taker will bring back the boots Mr. Chenot will change one or the other of the two with him, so that each may have a pair that will match. The boots were very heavy and with nailed soles, such as miners usually wear. If offered for sale anywhere in the neighborhood Mr. Chenot requests that the person to whom they may be offered will retain them and notify him.

Freight Reduction.

Great reduction has been made in freight rates on lumber, shingles and fence posts from Mound House to points in Owens valley. The following are the new rates: Lumber in carload lots, from $16 per 1,000 feet to $10 per 1,000 feet. On shipments less than carload lots the rate will be $15 per 1,000 feet. The rate of 70 cents per 100 pounds on shingles and lath in less than carload lots is reduced to 50 cents per 100 pounds. A rate of $60 per car on fence posts from Carson and $100 from San Francisco has been made. These are big reductions all around.

Many dominos have been engaged for the band ball on Monday evening.

Dan. Williams, of Lone Pine, has been suffering for several weeks with rheumatism, being unable to get around.

Miss Emma McMurry and Mr. and Mrs. L. Smith came down from Big Pine last Thursday, to make a farewell visit to friends here before going to Reno, where they intend to live in the future.

Last Monday there was a terriffic storm on the Atlantic Coast. On Broadway, New York, a woman was frozen to death; trains were blockaded by snow and for a time business and travel were brought to a standstill. Here in California fruit trees are in bloom, fields are green with young crops and the air is filled with the fragrance of spring. No wonder the rush of people to the Pacific Coast increases as the country and climate become better known at the East.

A set of the "Lamb Prize Essays" has been received. These essays are written by able Physicians and healthy homes and food, school houses and school life, protection against infectious diseases, and preventable causes of disease, death and injury in American workshops, and the best means for preventing and avoiding them. The Essays are published by the American Health Association, and can be had for the bare cost of publication, on application to the Secretary, Dr. Irving A. Watson, Concord, N. H.

The project for a free library at Bishop Creek is progressing very favorably. The reading room will be in the Academy and will be open to the public on all days of the week. It is intended to add at least five hundred books to the library immediately. Minerals and other specimens are solicited for a cabinet.

H. P. Cartier got back last Monday from his trip south. He went as far as San Diego. Mr. Cartier says there is no slacking up to the crowds of people who are flocking into Los Angeles and San Diego. He says when the railroad shall be extended to a connection at Los Angeles there will be a big rush of people to Owens Valley. He reports the wagon road to Mojave in good condition.

Poor old George Courtright has passed away. He died at Lone Pine last Monday aged about sixty years. The deceased was a native of the State of New York. During several years past he had been prospecting and mining in the Panamint country; living much alone and eating the coarse food usual with prospectors, pork and beans, black coffee and flap-jacks. This injured his health and last fall he came to the hospital at Lone Pine and remained there till he died. The old man had many friends in the county.

Dan. Leahy, who was arrested at Bishop Creek last week charged with making violent threats against William Charles, was discharged from custody, Justice Yaney not finding sufficient evidence to sustain the charge. Leahy says that monuments he had erected on a mining claim near the Dark Horse mine had been removed, and when he discovered this he said if he had been on the ground when it was done he would have prevented it. Leahy alleges that this was the only threat he made.

The tariff bill now before Congress proposes to make a reduction of fifteen dollars per ton on lead. During the past year there was an advance in the price of lead, and this in some degree helped to balance the loss to miners by the decline in the value of silver. Inyo is now the heaviest lead and silver producing county in the State; if the proposed reduction in duty on lead should be made it would be a very serious injury to the county. It is only the profit on lead than enables many of the miners to work their claims, and if this should be taken away the mines would have to stop entirely. The stoppage of the mines means loss of home markets for farmers and paralyzing all our industries.

A most important bill has recently been passed by the United States Senate. It is known as the "Water Storage Bill" and requires the Secretary of the Interior to direct the Chief of the Geological Survey to examine the streams in the States and Territories from which water is taken for purposes of irrigation, and to locate at suitable points thereon sites for the construction of reservoirs to hold out the abundance of the winter supply of water sufficient for the irrigation in summer. The reservoirs are to be located in natural basins, adjacent to the streams from which they are to be supplied, on such portions of the public domain as are susceptible of cultivation. All sagebrush covered land is very fertile when irrigated and cultivated; and as there are hundreds of thousands of acres of such land in our own State that could be irrigated if water storage were provided, for the importance of this measure to the State cannot be over estimated. Other States and Territories would be benefited equally. It is to be hoped that this bill will pass the House of Representatives and become a law. Senator Stewart is author of the bill.

The National Educational Association of the United States will hold its thirty-first annual session at San Francisco July 17th to 20th next. This will be one of the most important meetings ever held in San Francisco. It will bring together a very large number of the most intelligent people of the country, and their reports when they return home of what they have seen and heard while in California cannot fail to have great influence on the future of our State. The most careful calcutation of the number who will attend the convention from east of the Rocky Mountains estimates from five to seven thousand, and from this the figures vary from seven to ten thousand. The expense of entertaining this throng will be very great, and it is important to the whole State that they should be well entertained. Already a heavy expense is incurred for office rent, fuel, gas, stationery, printing, postage, expressage, telegraph, telephone and messenger service, clerical work etc. Each County and City Superintendent in the State has been appointed chairman of a local finance committee, himself to appoint the others, to solicit subscriptions and transmit the same when collected to the treasurer, James W. Anderson, at San Francisco.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.

JOHN C. EVANS, Stoutland, Mo., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take as much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house. If they had to take the feathers from under their wifs and babies to pay for it."

JOHN R. DODGE, JR., jeweler, Normal, Ill., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. Ist. It is the best machine ever invented by man. 2d. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. 3d. If you run short, you can not buy ours for $100."

Expressions Which Send the Creeps Up the Purist's Back.

The era of slang is upon us with a breadth that is almost appalling. Not only the slang that might be defined as the burlesque or colloquial form of expression, the language of low humor, or the jargon of thieves and vagrants, but a species that is almost as reprehensible. It will not do to apologize for it by saying that "slang is probably as old as human speech," and that the early writers indulged in it, especially the Greek and Roman dramatists; and while we may speak and write against the pernicious habit, we suspect that we will not grow disgusted enough with it to thoroughly uproot it until it has reached its climax. The worst fact about it is that it is not confined to the low and the illiterate, but has invaded the public schools, cultured society, and the literature of our books. I admit that some of the slang expressions are forcible and full of adequateness, among which I might name "fired out," "colossal check," etc. Still, even they ought to be tabooed.

But what excuse can possibly be offered for such words as "galloot," "sardine," "chump," "kicker," "kid," etc? Or such expressions as "let her go, Gallagher," "Waltzed off on his ear," "I should snicker," "Now you're shoutin'," etc. They are scarcely emphatic, and certainly not polite. Even the fair sex have caught the infection and speak about "his royal nibs" or the "howling swell." The girl of today is ready to "bet her bottom dollar," wants to know "what you're givin' her," lets you know that you are "off your base," and insists that you shall "come off," "vamose," "skedaddle," "absquatulate," and all that. You do her a slight favor and she exclaims: "O, thanks, awfully!" Why she should thank you with "reverend fear" is beyond your comprehension. Ask her to sing your sentimental ballad and she will probably say: "O, really, Mr. ——, I cawn't. It's too utterly too-too!"

While playing lawn-tennis with her she suddenly cries out: "O, you've given me such a twist." You feel exceedingly alarmed; you are afraid her collar bone is broken or that at least her wrist has been dislocated. You discover, however, that it is but tennis slang and that your sympathy has been wasted. She confidently tells you that Jennie Somebody is "no good" and had the "check" to propose to "scratch" her at the meeting of the club, because she hadn't "forked over" the "spondoolicks" for the last quarter. All that is to be deprecated, but the girls, heaven bless them, look so pretty, and use the terms so artlessly, that I haven't the heart to be severe in my reproof.

It isn't pleasant to be accosted by one's five-year-old hopeful as "an old snoozer," or to know that he is lying in wait to "knock the stuffin'" out of a neighbor's boy, or to "wipe up the floor" with him. Or to hear our short-sighted but high-spirited daughter tell the aforesaid brother that she wishes the other boy would "paste him on the snoot," or "knock him clean out the box," or "into the middle of next week." I don't know that I am especially sensitive, and yet I must say that such expressions send the creeps up my back.

The editor "swings a nasty quill;" the hired girl is a "pot wrestler;" when a thing suits us it's "just the cheese;" when too noisy we are told to "dry up" or to "suspend;" when cunningly on the alert we say "not if the court knows itself;" if one day is not available "s'mother one" is; when we die we "pass in our checks," are "put away on ice," and are finally "planted." So I might go on ad infinitum. You can think, I am sure, of at least a hundred words and phrases to which I have made no reference. For inventing cute words and phrases our country leads the procession. They are clever and appropriate, get into the topical song, the public "catch on," and they live and thrive, and in many instances the dictionary finally legitimizes them.

Slang, I insist, is the fungus on the stem. It is not the grafted fruit; it is the scum of language. It often belittles; it never beautifies. If we all spoke and wrote in a less exaggerated manner we would be less exaggerated in our ways of life and thought. Life, as well as speech, would perhaps grow more simple, more true, more worth living.—Philadelphia Call.

—Fogg at the dinner table is observed looking sadly at the infinitesimal portion of a chicken that has been dealt out to him. Suddenly a gleam of pleasure comes over his face, and he exclaims, "Never mind, in heaven I shall have two wings every day."

"He who's coy when Fortune's kind,
May after seek and never find."

Only a month ago Geo. A. Clarke, colored, the winner of $5,000 in the drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery on the 13th ult. was making both ends meet on the small salary of $40 per month. His good fortune was the result of one of those "dreams" so often read about, but which, he states, really prompted him to purchase one-twentieth of ticket No. 8,180, which drew the second capital prize of $100,000. He now has a comfortable home which he purchased but a few days after the receipt of the money, which he received by return post after placing same for collection through the Merchants National Bank. He invested $1,500 in his new home, and says he and his wife can now enjoy the comforts of life by careful investment of his surplus funds.

A similar instance is that of Mr. John McDermott, who was the other lucky holder. He is an employe at Ryan's Mill, and was formerly the recipient of a small bounty, only as a sustenance. He held another twentieth of the same ticket No. 8,180, and awoke one morning to find himself not great, but rich. He is carefully investing his prize, and says that he will use it as a nucleus to a large income.

The thousands of dollars that this institution has circulated since its organization has lessened the burdens of many in needy circumstances. It is true that people already possessed of means have been lucky holders, but oftener one will note that the winners are ones to whom the good fortune comes as an Arabian night dream.—Vicksburg (Miss) Herald, Jan. 4.

TWO AMERICAN TRAITS.

We Are a People of Runagates and Profligate Spendthrifts.

Two of our national characteristics are going to preserve the equilibrium of these blessed United States. In the first place the American love of danger, in the second place the American indifference to home. Few Americans, who are the most reckless of mortals, are only happy when tempting fate or daring Providence through some medium of mental excitement and personal danger. It will be difficult to convince future historians of us as a race that we did not prefer riding on a can of dynamite to reposing on an innocuous down cushion. The love of self preservation which is implanted in man seems to be entirely subservient to the love of peril in the average American. A rather nervous individual recently assured me that the tremor which assailed him when he first began to travel on the elevated railroads in New York always added a zest to his ride, and when custom wore away that feeling he was quite wretched.

"What did you wish should happen to you?" I asked, to humor what I believed to be an affectation.

"Just what did happen the other day," he responded, with a slight shrug of his shoulders. "I wanted to be in an accident. I never have been in an accident and I have done some pretty risky things. It is probably the same feeling that impels a boy to skate on thin ice, walk on peaked fences and scoot across a railroad track when the engine's coming. My theory is that half of the great inventions are the results of innate recklessness. The inventor of electricity may have been a thinker, but he was a boy first! And do you believe a timid woman would ever have dreamed of building an L road? She likes it now she has got it, for the gentler sex are proverbial for rushing in where angels fear to tread, and who among your acquaintances would hesitate to cross the ocean in four days if any means could be invented to condense the voyage to these brief dimensions?"

The fact is, this person is thoroughly American. We do like to be scared. As to the second characteristic, the indifference to home, we shall never be anything but roamers. Perhaps as Americans become more and more imbued with foreign customs they will cultivate the "ancestral hall" feeling and throw out those roots which must cling to the hearthstone where their fathers have sat before them. The American constitution, the laws of this happy country, are not exactly in accord with family roof trees, however much they may be with the genealogical specimens, but why as soon as a rich man has builded himself a palace and filled it with treasures he wants to get out and build another is unaccountable, save that, being American, he cannot help himself.

It is not merely the unrest of possession that seizes him. He is impelled by a love of change, that natural fickleness which makes him dissatisfied with that particular side of the street or the architectural plan of certain rooms, and so in a trace of years the palace is to let furnished or it is in the market, and milord, with his family, wandering in the four quarters of the globe.—Boston Herald.

What Physicians and Lawyers Earn.

Says a west side physician: "Probably the most lucrative medical practice in Chicago is worth about $25,000 a year. That is the best the most successful physician in Chicago can do. Doctors do not earn as much as lawyers. I mean the successful ones. I suppose there are a dozen or more lawyers in town who make more than $25,000 a year, and a score or so enjoy an income of from $15,000 to $20,000 a year. You can count on the fingers of your two hands the number of doctors making $10,000 a year. One of them is a colored man, whose practice is largely among white people. Yet the average earnings of the physicians of the city probably exceed the average earnings of the lawyers. The average in both professions is startlingly low, probably not to exceed $1,000. There are hundreds of good openings for physicians in the growing country of the west, but young men persist in clinging to the city, where many of them eke out an existence on an income of $300 or $400 a year, waiting for something better to turn up."—Chicago Herald.

Russian Cities' Fire Department.

The same precautions against fire are taken in Moscow and St. Petersburg today that were in use a century ago. Scores of fire towers are everywhere seen. They run up about seventy-five to 100 feet, are built like a lighthouse, with winding stairway, and have a platform all around the top, where the watchman patrols day and night. If a fire is discovered a signal is given and the fire department turns out. It was only recently that St. Petersburg, the capital, with hundreds of millions of government property, secured a steam fire engine. And that is a poor, old fashioned affair. The hand engine does service there yet, as in most other cities in the empire. When a fire breaks out the streets are cleared for such a department display as an American town would make; people go wild, talk loud, get in the way, and when the fire burns out the department goes back to watch the towers for another signal.—Moscow Cor. New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Working in a Mustard Mill.

I am employed in a mustard mill, where we daily grind hundreds of bushels of the strongest mustard seeds, then sifting it and preparing it for the trade. We also grind peppers and spices, occasionally preparing cayenne pepper. I work eight to ten hours a day in the fine dust that floats in the atmosphere of the room. You couldn't hardly come inside without sneezing for hours after. Yet I am fat, hearty, and do not know what sickness is. I make good wages and have worked many years at it, but there is one drawback. Wherever the creases in the skin made by the joints, etc., are the mustard and pepper get in, the first acting the same as a mustard plaster and the pepper irritating until sometimes the inflammation and sores are awful.—Philadelphia News.

Cats in Paris.

The French capital harbors the largest number of cats of any city in the world in proportion to its size. Whole colonies of them are to be found in the vicinity of the markets, where they feed on broken victuals and make incessant war on the rats. At the Halles Centrales their numbers have increased so rapidly of late that a portion of them had to be destroyed, as they roamed about in bands like wild beasts, and were beginning to be dangerous. Duprez, the well known tenor singer, has earned the Le pere des chats, for he daily feeds hundreds of these animals at his own expense. The prefecture of police likewise entertains a large colony of cats, which are placed under the care of an old woman of 70, who supplies them with daily rations of meat and milk.—Le Magasin Pittoresque.

Use of Water at Meals.

Opinions differ as to the effect of the free ingestion of water at meal times, but the view most generally received is probably that it dilutes the gastric juice and so retards digestion. Apart from the fact that a moderate delay in the process is by no means a disadvantage, as Sir William Roberts has shown in his explanation of the popularity of tea and coffee, it is more than doubtful whether any such effect is in reality produced. When ingested during meals, water may do good by washing out the digested food and by exposing the undigested part more thoroughly to the action of the digestive ferments. Pepsin is a catalyptic body, and a given quantity will work almost indefinitely provided the peptones are removed as they are formed. The good effects of water, drunk freely before meals, has, however, another beneficial result—it washes away the mucus which is secreted by the mucus membrane during the intervals of repose, and favors peristalsis of the whole alimentary tract. The membrane thus cleansed is in a much better condition to receive food and convert it into soluble compounds. According to Dr. Leuf, who has made this subject a special study, cold water should be given to persons who have sufficient vitality to react and hot water to the others. In chronic gastric catarrh it is extremely beneficial to drink warm or hot water before meals, and salt is said in most cases to add to the good effect produced.—British Medical Journal.

Washington's Famous Hotel.

Willard's hotel is a sort of milestone marking the growth of Washington. It is within the memory of men now living that what is now the spacious hotel was merely a country inn, with a front of not more than thirty feet. The oldest portion of the grand hotel of today was built about three-quarters of a century ago, and was known first as the City hotel, afterward as Williamson's, and again it was called Fuller's, under which it was known until along in the '50s, when the Willard brothers took the house and gave it their name. As the city grew the house grew, until it now occupies more than two-thirds of a block of ground, its many stories of apartments furnishing accommodation for a thousand guests.

Through its many years it has ever been the favorite resort of statesmen in both houses of congress. Many consultations which had for their object the happiness of millions have been held there. During the war officers of all grades found it a welcome refuge from the wearisome details and privations of campaigning. Presidents-elect have gone out from it to take the oath of office. Many caucuses of great moment, deciding important steps of public policy, have been held there. Young benedicts and their brides visiting the capital feel that their wedding tour has not been perfectly rounded unless they visit the famous hostelry. The building now has a front of 150 feet on Pennsylvania avenue and runs 350 feet on Fourteenth street. It is the hotel of Washington.—New York Graphic.

Bismarck's Narrow Escape.

According to private correspondence from Berlin, Prince Bismarck has been considerably troubled of late by the effect of the bullet wound he received so many years ago from the revolver of a would be assassin. Many people have forgotten even the circumstance that the great German chancellor was so murderously attacked by the youth Blind, but as a matter of fact five shots were discharged at him, and it was simply owing to the sturdy way in which he grasped his assailant's arm that only one of them took effect. This bullet glanced off one of the chancellor's lower ribs, and a bony excrescence which developed in consequence still marks the place.

As it turned out, too, Bismarck's risk was by no means at an end when he grappled with and seized his assailant. A military guard hurried up on hearing the chancellor's shouts, and the impulse of the foremost of these stalwart Prussian grenadiers, on seeing a comparatively feeble stripping being held and seemingly maltreated by a ponderous man with a bald head—for Bismarck's hat had fallen off—was to club his rifle and bring it down on the latter's bare pate. Luckily for Germany, however, the chancellor warded off his impending fate by shouting out, "Hold on; I am Bismarck!" on which, as the latter himself tells the story, the soldier dropped his weapon in a much greater fright than that of his escaped victim.—London Figaro.

"Swapping" Out West.

"Swapping is always associated with western life," said a real estate broker to a reporter. "One always imagines a cowboy or ranchman meeting another and exchanging a horse for a gun, and a blanket or a number of cattle for a piece of land. This barter is not only carried on in the west. You would be surprised to see what queer transactions we have to make sometimes. A lady in this city who had some fine diamonds, wished to make an investment in real estate, but had no money to invest. She came to us and we managed to get a piece of land for which she gave some of her diamonds. The man who disposed of the land did not want the diamonds after he had received them, and he again managed to exchange them for a share in a good paying business in a small country town. Sometimes all the stock in the store will be valued and taken for real estate; sometimes horses and carriages will be given for businesses."—New York Mail and Express.

Better Than Hotbed Processes.

"Better know one thing well than many indifferently," was the rule by which the children of the last generation were trained, while a good education was thought to be a growth of years and careful, patient study, and not to be forced by the hotbed process now too much in vogue. It was thought, too, that no education could be complete unless there was first a solid foundation on which to build, the bottom layer of said foundation being a thorough knowledge of reading, writing and spelling, geography, arithmetic, history and grammar. These are homely accomplishments, but far more necessary to one's success in life as a scholar than a mere smattering of the higher branches and an ambitious attempt at an essay, which may have in it fine figures of speech, borrowed from some text book, and classical allusions taken from the encyclopædia, but is still lamentably at fault so far as writing and spelling and grammar are concerned.—Mary J. Holmes.

A New Building Material.

Building stones made of corn cobs form the object of a new Italian patent. The cobs are pressed by machinery into forms similar to brick and held together by wire. They are made water tight by soaking with tar. These molds are very hard and strong; their weight is less than one-third of that of hollow brick, and they can never get damp.—Chicago News.

Marco Bozaris in Politics—Vote till the clock's last stroke expires; vote for water and not for fires; vote for a power that never tires—canal and the guarantee.

An Earthly Paradise—Wife—My dear, where is No Man's Land? Husband—It's a small strip west of the Indian Territory. Why? Wife—Oh, nothing, I was merely thinking what a delightful spot it must be.

PEACE ON EARTH

Awaits that countless army of martyrs, whose ranks are constantly recruited from the victims of nervousness and nervous diseases. The price of the boon is a systematic course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the finest and most genial of tonic nervines, pursued with reasonable persistence. Easier, pleasanter and safer this than to swash the victualling department with pseudo-tonics, alcoholic or the reverse, beef extracts, nerve foods, narcotics, sedatives and poisons in disguise. "Tired Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep," is the providential recuperant of weak nerves, and this glorious franchise being usually the consequence of sound digestion and increased vigor, the great stomachic which insures both is productive also of repose at the required time. Not unrefreshed awakens the individual who uses it, but vigorous, clear headed and tranquil. Use the Bitters also in fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney troubles, constipation and biliousness.

Come to the bridal chamber, Death!
Come to the mother, when she feels
For the first time, her first-born's breath,
And thou art terrible!

The untimely death which annually carries off thousands of human beings in the prime of youth, is indeed terrible. The first approach of consumption is insidious, and the sufferer himself is the most unconscious of its approach. One of the most alarming symptoms of this dread disease is, in fact, the ineradicable hope, which lurks in the heart of the victim, preventing him from taking timely steps to arrest the malady. That it can be arrested in its earlier stages is beyond question, as there are hundreds of well-authenticated cases where Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has effected a complete cure.

Let a man sit down on a bent pin and he will arise promptly and speak briefly to the point.

A TRIAL BY JURY.

That great American jury, the people, have rendered a unanimous verdict in favor of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, the standard remedy for bowel and stomach disorders, biliousness, sick headache, dizziness, constipation and sluggish liver.

Generally speaking, the gentleman who has just accepted a position is not a bit happier about it than the man who has just got a job.

OUR WOMEN ABROAD.

The Experience of Some American Girls Who Married Italian Noblemen.

It is now ten years since a former Consul of the United States in Italy said to me: "American parents and guardians ought never to allow their daughters or wards to come over and pass one, two or three years, as the case may be, in the study of music for the opera, or other professional singing, without some elderly female relative to accompany and protect them, and also that they may appear respectable in the eyes of respectable people here." This same Consul told me of instances where great trials, and, in one case, how positive harm had come to those either neglecting or being ignorant of European manners and customers. A young lady might travel from one end of the United States to the other, or might stop any length of time for study or any other purpose wherever she pleased, with perfect impunity, and without any impropriety; but it is different here, and the Consul's word of caution and warning had reason in it.

But I wish a word of caution and warning might be raised for the benefit of marriageable young American ladies and widows, who do not come here to study. Many such come accompanied by a weak maternal relative, who is dazzled by the title and the show of some Baron, Count or Duke, who, ten to one, is an impecunious younger son of some old family run to seed. If he had money besides titles he would marry one of his own countrywomen and ask no favor of the foreigner. Recently a most eminent professor of one of our universities was over here for the purpose of seeing a young lady relative of his, who was on the Continent with her mother, and had been carried away by one of these noblemen (?), whose affections had scented money from afar. But no change was made despite the good professor's counsels, and as he left Italy he dropped me a line from Como, saying that "neither advice, common-sense counsel nor any thing else could prevail with an American girl when the 'noble' bee got under her bonnet."

All this is too true. Some of your readers may have seen an account of the way one of our Consuls in Tuscany found, in a madhouse, an American lady who had truly given her heart and money to one of those impecunious adventurers, and who then had had her shut up in an asylum, when she was no more insane than the soundest person in Florence.

All Italian husbands are not bad men. I have seen some as happy domestic relations between husband and wife as I have ever seen anywhere, and I should judge that there is greater domestic felicity here than in any other Latin nation; but as a whole, the standard of family life and happiness, from the very manner of contracting marriage, is far below that of Anglo-Saxon countries. The impecunious dandies with a romantic noble title, have found out the weakness of the American and the English girl, and they take advantage of it. In 1882 I noticed in the bank of Messrs. Turner & Co. an English lady, I should say of twenty-five, who, accompanied by a poor, sickly-looking father, was engaged in depositing some money. I could see that she was the stronger character of the two, and a person of determined will. I was informed that she was "dead in love" with an Italian, but that he would not come to terms until he had made it a condition of marriage that all her money should be assigned to him, as he knew how to invest it in Italy to the best advantage! And she turned over every centime to him. Not six months after her marriage this poor lady, from opulence, was turned adrift with only sufficient money to hire a few furnished rooms at Sorrento, and I was applied to to recommend persons to go there for pension, in order that she might earn her living.

Only this year a respectable widow lady, residing here in Naples, allowed herself to be carried away by the attentions and the polite bearing toward her of an Italian gentleman. She consulted more than one person, and among others Mr. Camphausen, our present American Consul, and they all, in answer to her question—"Shall I marry him?"—responded in the language of Mr. Punch's celebrated letter, "Don't." It was, however, of no use; she "went and did it," and in less than a month the scoundrel tried to strangle her, and has since heaped all manner of indignities upon her. In one sense she was a little wiser than her English sister and many of her own. She did not assign him her money, and hence the great ire of Mr. Impecunious.—Italian Cor. American Register.

Banks and Depositors.

It is generally supposed that banks are eager to receive deposits from all sources and pay little attention to the character of the depositor, provided they get their money. This is a very great mistake. Good banks are not in the habit of opening accounts with every man who wants to deposit without knowing something of their customers' business methods. It is almost as hard to become a depositor in some of the strong Eastern banks as it is to get a position in one of them, and the depositor must come highly recommended before his money is accepted. The fact is, the relation between a banker and his depositor is a confidential one, and the banker can not afford to have tricky or dishonest patrons whom he knows he must watch all the time. He would rather let them keep their money and have nothing to do with them.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SHILOH'S BATTLE FIELD.

A Visit to the Scenes of the Civil War's Most Sanguinary Conflict.

The battle-field of Shiloh, in Tennessee, lies twenty miles northeast of Corinth, Miss. The Tennessee river, flowing north, is on the east of the ground over which the battle was fought; Snake creek, with its confluent, Owl creek, forms the northern, and Lick creek the southern, limit of the battle-field proper. The ground on the west is broken into high ridges and deep valleys. It was covered for the most part, at the date of the battle, with a heavy growth of forest trees. Towards the river the surface is more level, but cut in some places into deep gorges. It was up one of these—called Dill's Branch—that the gunboats fired during the battle.

The road to Pittsburgh Landing is little changed since the day we marched out from Corinth. It is hard to repeople this country highway, so quiet and pastoral now, with a moving army; to realize that it was once crowded from one end to the other with soldiery; that artillery, wagon-trains and ambulances blocked the way. It seems an age since, "burning with high hope," we went out to that fatal field "made rankly fertile with the blood of men." Every mile of the way is marked by some remembered incident. Beneath the spreading branches of a wild-cherry tree, which still stands near the edge of an old field, we bivouacked with a comrade the first night out. At Monterey we saw General Albert Sidney Johnston ride along the lines; and a little further on, a staff officer rode back and showed us the battle-flag of our corps. At Lick creek, we met the first prisoner; he had been captured in a little affair with the cavalry. Bold and defiant he sat his horse, and gave back to the boys "as good as they sent" in the way of "chaff." Further on, the last bivouac for many brave men, where we lay within rifle shot of the enemy's lines, silent and waiting for the dawn of that "woful Sabbath morning," which came at last, and with it the call to arms. Down through the woods, en echelon, moved the gray lines. Then came the straggling fire from the pickets, the whiz and sharp spat of bullets, and then the roar of musketry, the thunder of artillery, the shriek of hurtling shells, the whir of grape and canister, the hiss of Minie balls, the cry of the wounded, the wild shouts of charging lines, and above all rose an ever-thickening cloud of blue and sulphurous smoke, out of which rushed riderless horses, and men mangled and bleeding were borne, and the earth beneath it was thickly strown with the dying and the dead.

To-day, after twenty-five years have rolled away, we looked down into this Valley of the Shadow of Death—where sleep for all time "the nareturning brave." Billowed with the foliage of waving forests, golden and bloody red with the dyes of autumn, and glorified by the sunlight of a perfect autumn day, it stretched far away, and seemingly swept on to where, bathed in a purple haze, distant hills lifted their heads beyond the shining river, quiet and peaceful now, as if that dreadful and deadly drama had never been enacted there. Yet before us lay Shiloh, Spring and Church; the Duncan Field; the old Peach Orchard; the Sunken Road and Hornet's Nest; and the "dreadful hollow" on Tillman's Branch—each with its separate story of frightful carnage, fierce assault and heroic resistance.

Many changes have taken place since the battle. Every piece of the old church has been carried away by relic-hunters, and a new one has been built where it stood. The pastor of the original church was one Wolf, by name. History is silent as to whether he was the kind of a Wolf one would wish to keep from his door; but evidently this particular Wolf was kept from his own door—if he was the least bit afraid of "villainous saltpetre"—for a while, at least.

The Spring where thousands who are now gone beyond the Ali-quiet River once quenched their thirst is as dry as powder-keg; the Duncan Field is abandoned; the Peach Orchard is a thing of the past; the old Sunken Road is entirely disused, and the "red brush" that grew so thickly at the Hornet's Nest, and was mowed down by the deadly shower of missiles from each side, has again overgrown the ground. The wood where General Johnson was wounded has been cut bare of timber, and the spot where he died is now marked by a small cedar-tree, growing in the midst of a cotton field. The tree which stood where gallant Wallace fell has been made into rails, and only the uprooted stump remains. The limits of the battle-field can be made out by scars of shot and shell, which still show on the trees. The bullets have been mostly cut out, thousands of them having been gathered and sold, and thousands collected by relic-hunters.

The National Cemetery is beautifully situated on a high bluff overlooking the river. At the front gate—occupying the place of honor—is the grave of Henry Burke, "The Drummer Boy of Shiloh," celebrated in song and story; and all around him lie his comrades who fell on that dark and bloody ground—heroes all. In all, 3,596 interments were made in the cemetery, of which 2,801 were those of "unknown" dead. Whether they fought under the Stars and Stripes, or under the Tri-color, every soldier who stood by his flag through that desperate battle, or who died at his post, was a hero; and those who fell deserve a monument commemorative of their heroism and undaunted courage.—Rawlins Young, in Frank Leslie's Weekly.

FIRES IN THEATERS.

Safeguards With Which Every Place of Amusement Should Be Provided.

Perhaps the most generally discussed—and it might be fairly assumed the most generally accepted—safeguard is the iron curtain. Taken for granted that the fire in most cases originates on the stage, the very natural idea suggests itself that the first thing to be done is to sever the connection between the stage and auditorium. Unfortunately, the iron curtain is not always an infallible safeguard, for although it probably prevented a panic at Munich in 1879, yet the Berlin National Theater was totally destroyed in 1883, despite the iron curtain and use of incombustible scenery. Iron curtains, too, have an unfortunate knack of getting out of order just when they are most wanted, so that until they become more easily accessible in cases of sudden necessity, their utility is questionable. That they could be more easily accessible goes without saying. Were they, to quote the happy idea of the practical editor of the Stage, "painted and used as act-drops," there is no good reason why they might not be utilized in any emergency. The more general use of electric light instead of gas might be another means of lessening the number of fatilities in theaters; while the prohibition of open fire-places, lime-light tanks, and carpenter's and property-maker's shops within the main walls of the building, would undoubtedly tend to make theaters much safer than they are at present. Then, again, the removal from the stage of all scenery not in actual use, and especially—when not needed—such scenery as "borders" hanging from the "flies," ought to be insisted on; while the hydrants, buckets, etc., at the "wings" and "flies" should be inspected regularly by some competent person. It is this want of inspection which often renders the most perfect appliances useless in time of need. On an Atlantic passenger steamer, the carpenter is obliged to visit and test twice each day every bulkhead in the ship, while the seamen are regularly drilled in every probable circumstance of a fire or wreck at sea. Why not apply the same discipline to theater employes?

In spite of the most elaborate precautions, however, fires will occasionally occur, and as the safety of the audience, is, after all, the first thing to be considered, the real remedy consists in the construction of proper and unimpeded exits, instead of the tortuous corkscrew passages which are too often en evidence in the older places of amusement. I lay a stress on unimpeded exits, for, though wide and roomy passages may be built ad infinitum, they will be of little service if impeded by a barrier which, however useful for the orderly admission of the audience, is decidedly disadvantageous to their chances of getting out alive should a panic of any kind occur. Will it be believed that in a well-appointed theater I happened to visit a week or two after after the Exeter disaster—a theater, too, which possessed admirable exits, and in which the spaces between the rows of seats in all parts of the house were every thing that could be desired—that even here a barrier, firmly fastened by an iron bar, extended more than half way across one of the passages, and was not unhinged until the performance had almost concluded!—Chambers' Journal.

A GIRL DRUMMER.

She is Very Lady-Like, But Won't Stand Being Snubbed.

A trim little woman skipped lightly from the steps of a Baltimore & Ohio passenger coach at the Chestnut street station the other night. Walking ahead of her were Senator Thomas V. Cooper and wife, who came in the same car from Washington. There was something about the female that would attract the second glance as she hurried off in her neat fitting, long plush coat, showing just the lower plaits of a stylish traveling dress, and a jaunty bit of a brown velvet bonnet bobbing with her head, as lively as the convenient grip-sack rattled which she carried in her hand.

"That's a traveling saleslady," remarked a train hand. "Yes, she's a regular female drummer. She travels on the road regularly, and makes herself quite at home in the car. She's not over eighteen years old, though if you heard her talk you'd think she was twenty or more. She's as bright as a dollar, and a very pleasant and a ready talker. She lives in Pittsburgh, travels for a millinery house, and is very popular with her customers."

In all her traveling alone between Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington she is said to have suffered no annoyance or insult. Though quite free to make and pick acquaintance with fellow passengers of her own sex, she carries herself with ladylike dignity, and yet her manner might seem a trifle familiar to strangers unacquainted with the fact that she virtually makes her home in the cars. It would be hard to tell just how many new-comers on the line have had their journey shortened by the pleasure of her company. It is said that her bright and interesting chat has touched sparks of friendship in the bosoms of many fair travelers whom she has met. Mrs. Senator Cooper and she parted great friends. An incident which shows her composure occurred on her last trip South. After traveling some distance with a party homeward bound from California she seated herself beside one of the women and opened up a conversation with some remark about the weather.

"I don't think I know you, miss," exclaimed the woman with a haughty air, and drawing herself away as if from a thing unholy.

"Excuse me, madam," said the young daughter of trade, jumping up like a flash, "I thought I was addressing a lady.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

ANCIENT WATER-WORKS.

Aqueducts and Reservoirs Built Many Hundred Years Ago.

During the first century of the Christian era the water supply of ancient Rome was so abundant "that whole rivers of water flowed through the streets." It has been estimated at three hundred and seventy-five million gallons per day, or three hundred and seventy-five gallons for each inhabitant, and was conducted through nine conduits of masonry, in the construction of which wonderful engineering skill was shown. Their aggregate length was 249 miles. The principal aqueducts were the Aqua Martia, erected 431 years B. C., thirty-eight miles in length, and partly composed of 7,000 arches; the Aqua Claudia, a subterranean channel for thirty-six and one-fourth miles, for ten and three-fourth miles a surface conduit, three miles a vaulted tunnel, and seven miles on lofty arcades, with a capacity of 96,000,000 gallons daily; and the Nova Anlo, which was forty-three miles in length. Some of these aqueducts rose in three distinct arches, which conveyed water from sources of different elevations.

The ancient water-works at Jerusalem consisted first of wells in the limestone ridges on which the city was built; but as the population increased the Jews were obliged to gather the rainfall during the winter season and store it in tanks and cisterns placed in secure inclosures and within the walls of the temple. An aqueduct, constructed of stone laid in cement, brings water from the pools of Bethlehem, about six miles, to a tank lying under the chief Turkish mosque. The population of Jerusalem seldom suffered from water famine. Strabo mentions as something remarkable that there was always a plentiful supply of water within the city while a famine prevailed in the region around about.

Among the great waterworks of the world those of Peru were in some respects the most difficult achievements of any. The incas built aqueducts from the slopes of the Andes for a distance of over one hundred miles to the capital, carrying the water partly through tunnels cut in the rocks and partly on arcades on supporting pillars of mason work to span valleys, the channels being composed of cut stone without cement. From these great aqueducts a number of branch conduits and furrows were laid laterally for irrigating purposes.

In France the famous Pond du Gard aqueduct, which supplied the town of Nismes, is still an object of interest. It consists of three tiers of arches, the lowest of six, supporting eleven of equal span in the central tier, surmounted by thirty-five of smaller size. Its height is 180 feet, with a channel of 5 feet high by 10 feet wide. The capacity was estimated at fourteen million gallons per day.

In the year 600 B. C., Polycrates, King of Samos, built an aqueduct to supply his capital, bringing water through a tunnel driven for over 6,000 yards through a limestone rock, while about the same time the people of Lycia, in Asia Minor, carried water across the vale of Patera through a stone syphon, which would indicate that the ancients were not ignorant of the laws of hydrostatics.

Carthage was supplied by water brought from the hill ranges on the south, over seventy miles distant, and the ruins of an aqueduct, built in the Roman style, may still be seen.

The water-works of Athens were begun about 500 B. C., and consisted of stone aqueducts lined with baked clay and carried almost wholly on the surface of the ground.

In Constantinople, the capital of the Eastern Empire, the Romans left numerous subterranean reservoirs covered with stone arcades resting on pillars.

In India tanks and reservoirs were constructed on an enormous scale and were the chief dependence during droughts.—Chicago News.

CARPET CLEANING.

An Apparatus Which Reduces Its Dangers to a Minimum.

One of the most prolific sources of the propogation of infectious or contagious diseases is, as you have more than once pointed out, the house carpet, which can retain the germs of these diseases. But as the carpets must be cleaned, and as the practice of beating them in the open air is considered a public nuisance, M. Bunel, the principal architect of the Prefecture of Police, was charged to devise some means by which this nuisance might be reduced to a minimum, or, if possible, entirely prevented. M. Bunel submitted an apparatus in the form of a cylinder to the Council of Public Hygenie, in which the carpets are placed, and by a rotary motion the dust is dislodged. The advantages of this invention over the ordinary method had been approved of; but M. Bunel soon discover that dust and other particles escaping from the carpets, instead of being burned, as he thought they would be, were utilized in industry in filling cushions, and the finer particles were employed for coating paper-hangings, which give them their velvety appearance. This highly objectionable practice was soon brought to the notice of the police authorities, and on the advice of the Council of Hygenie it is ordained that the dust and particles beaten out from carpets should be collected in closed apparatus and burned; but those who may wish to utilize them should have them previously disinfected and then submitted to a current of steam under pressure at temperature above 100° C., or of sulphurous acid.—Paris Lancet.

GENUINE LONDON FOG.

A Reliable American Tourist Descants on Its Strange Peculiarities.

It was the first real fog we had seen. As London is a large city of course it can afford to have a good-sized fog. It was so dark we did not get up till eleven o'clock. The fog was then very dense—and full of dents—where you would poke your head out of the window to see what was the matter.

Children below us were making fog-men, putting hats on them and pipes in their mouths. Men had fun pressing it in their hands and fog-balling each other. Street-cars had extra horses to assist in pulling through the fog, and they would leave long tunnels along the route down which one could look, until it caved in. We heard it intimated that landlords stuffed their bed ticks with it, as it made soft, springy couches to rest upon, and better than straw and corn-cobs. It was the worst fog that you ever attempted to shake a stick at. If you went to talk out of doors your mouth would fill so full of fog that you could spit it out only with great difficulty. Merchants would sweep it off the sidewalks and shovel it away high enough so that a man with a plug hat could walk under it. You could take a cross-cut saw and saw it very well. It was so dense that we would have been in the same fix if we had been in the bottom of the sea. The vast weight of it broke down a number of roofs in the city. A man fell out of the third-story window of his hotel by accident, but came down through the fog so slowly, that his friends had to yell to him to hurry up—or down—as they were getting tired of waiting for him, and were afraid he would have to stay up there. When we went out in town we had to hire a man to push us along. The fog was so thick that we couldn't look far enough back to see who he had got to push him.

A reliable Englishman told us that a century ago, during a similar fog, the squadron hoisted anchor in the Thames and sailed up-town solely through the fog. He said to this day that street is called "Fleet," and in another street they stranded by the fog getting lighter, and in consequence the street was named "The Strand." As I am on probation I will not swear that this is altogether so, or more so.

I went down the street smoking a cigar, thinking I was making a good deal of smoke, but found the cigar had gone out the same moment I had. You could get a double handful of the fog and squeeze all the water out of it, and families did this to save water-rate. Our coat-pockets would get so full of it that we had to scoop it out. We send you a section of yesterday's fog, dried, so you can see what it looks like.—A. W. Bellaw, in Drake's Magazine.

HONEST SELF-CONTROL.

A Weighty But Often Neglected Disciplinary Duty of Teachers.

An expert and experienced official in an insane asylum said to us a little time since that these institutions are filled with people who have given up to their feelings, and that no one is quite safe from an insane asylum who allows himself to give up to his feelings. The importance of this fact is altogether too little appreciated, especially by teachers. We are always talking about the negative virtues of discipline, but we rarely speak of the positive virtues. We discipline the schools to keep the children from mischief, to maintain good order, to have things quiet, to enable the children to study. We say, and say rightly, that there can not be a good school without good discipline. We do not, however, emphasize as we should the fact that the discipline of the school, when rightly done, is as vital to the future good of the child as the lessons he learns. Discipline of the right kind is as good mental training as arithmetic. It is not of the right kind unless it requires intellectual effort, mental conquests. The experienced expert, referred to above, was led to make the remark to us by seeing a girl give way to the "sulks." "That makes insane women," she remarked, and told the story of a woman in an asylum, who used to sulk until she became desperate, and the expert said: "You must stop it; you must control yourself." To which the insane woman replied: "The time to say that was when I was a girl. I never controlled myself when I was well, and now I can not." The teacher has a wider responsibility, a weightier disciplinary duty than she suspects. The pupils are not only to be controlled, but they must be taught to control themselves absolutely, honestly, completely.—Journal of Education.

Ex-Empress Eugenie.

The eyes are still beautiful, though they show that they have shed many a tear, and are sadly shrunken. Indeed, standing there to let her pass before us, I thought of nothing so much as her womanhood. Alone! forever alone with her broken hopes and the memory of her dead boy, her life and her love gone at one blow! We watched her at the foot of the stair withdrawing the hand from the helping arm—she walked so well, with such graceful carriage. Her figure is still fine, or seemed so. She is above medium height, and was dressed beautifully, though only in some simple soft stuff—merino or cashmere. I thought it a morning gown at first, but as I saw her later in the day in the same costume, concluded it was not entirely that. It was a pleasure to me to see her and a bit of good fortune certainly.—Cor. Detroit Free Press.

OLD FATHER DUNDER.

The Instructive Story of a Boy Who Believed in Dreams and Signs.

Shildren, I shall now tell you der shtory of der poy who pelieves in some dreams und signs. His name vhas Hans Dunderwetter, und he lifs mit his folks shust at der foot of a big hill in Shermany. I haf seen dot hill myself, und so I know dot shtory vhas pooty true.

Vhell, vhen dis poy vhas aboudt eight years old he goes oafer to shtay all day mit an old womans, and she tells him all aboudt bears und ghosts und dreams und signs. From dot time he vhas a shpoiled poy. If his fadder like him to go down cellar he vhas afraidt of spooks. If his mother like him to go oop shtairs he vhas afraidt of bears. I like to say to you right off dot no ghosts vhas oafer known in any country. A ghost vhas a white sheet hanging on der pack of a shair, or some bed-spread left out on der fence in der night. Dere vhas some bears aroundt, but dey doan' come in der house to pite you. In sooch a place like Detroit you may go all oafer und you doan' see one bear—not one. He vhas afraidt to come here. If he does he vhas dead in two minutes.

Und so Hans he always peliefs in signs und dreams, too. If he dream dot he fall down shteep hill he doan' get oudt of bed until ten o'clock. If he dreams dot he vhas a fish, he vhas scart und hides in der barn all day. If he sees a crow fly to der north dot vhas a pad sign, und Hans don't shop any wood dot day. If he sees a white cow go along mit a red horse after her, dot vhas a sign of money, und he goes out und walks ten miles for to look for some pocket-books in der roadt. He vhas no goot to his parents, und eafery pody else makes fun of him und says he vhas soft mit der headt.

Vhell, shildrens, Hans vhas growing oop in a badt way. If der moon vhas oafer his left shoulder he doan' hoe out some cabbages nor work mit der potatoes. If der sun goes down oafer his right elbow dot means he shall go to town und get a letter in der post-office. Between dreams und signs he vhas no goot for work, und he goes aboudt in rags like he vhas a beggar. His fadder lick him more as fife hoonered times, und his mother cry more ash two barrels of tears, but it vhas no use.

Vhell, all dis goes on until Hans vhas sixteen years old. Den one day he sees two hens on der fence, while two crows fly oafer. At der same time somebody shnores in his shleep, und der bucket fall down der well. ### An Erroneous Idea Corrected.

As to the cussedness of the rattlesnake, I would like to correct a very common error. These otherwise dangerous reptiles always give warning and never bite unless roughly trod upon or incautiously caught with the hand. On a cold, rainy or damp day, when partially torpid, they give no alarm and will not bite under any circumstances. A man may take them up and fold them around his neck without harm. The same may be done at other times, but the performer must be extremely cautious. He may touch any part of the snake's body, except the tail or rattles. The rattler has a well-known, but unwritten law: "Thou shalt not suffer any man to touch thy tail or thy rattles, on pain of death to the offender." Observing this law an expert may handle one of these reptile monsters almost any time with absolute impunity. It is needless to say, however, that I do not recommend such performance as an every-day exercise. Even an unloaded gun will sometimes go off unexpectedly.—J. W. Scott, in Philadelphia Press.

—Gilhooly had had one small helping of the steak, and Mrs. Jones asked him why he did not take a second installment. "I was waiting to have it tendered, ma'am," said Gilhooly. Mrs. Jones smiled sweetly, but her face was crimson. As soon as the breakfast was over and the boarders were gone Mrs. Jones was seen poring over the dictionary for the different meanings of the verb "to tender."—Texas Siftings.

IN HER OWN COIN.

"Married a milliner! what a shame!
Ah, well! there's none but himself to blame!
There's many an heiress in his own set
He might have drawn in his gilded net,
What a pity his proud old name should be Bestowed on nobody, such as she.

"If he were the only one concerned
I should consider his fate well earned;
But to think, Mrs. S——, that you and I
May never pass that creature by;
But must court, and visit, and chat with her,
Who has formerly been our milliner!

"For one of her kind, she appears quite well—
But then, Mrs. S——, you know blood will tell;
I never was quite so shocked and——what?
An introduction to Lady Mott?
O, yes; with pleasure—most glad to meet
The one who has made our ball complete.

"What's that, my lady? My voice you say,
Caused you to pause as you passed this way?
Both face and voice seem familiar to you?
'Tis strange, but I seem to have met you too,
That was my maiden name—Miss Vance—
In London? Ah, yes—excuse—my dance."

"Who is that person?" asked Lady Mott,
As she turned to address that little knot
Of curious females gathered near;
"Whom did she marry? and how came she here?"
Mrs. S—— responded: "The millionaire B——, Brought her a bride from across the sea."

"Ah, yes;" and the dainty red lips curled—
"And she the flag of caste unfurled!
In her maiden days I knew Mrs. B——,
Though she seems to have quite forgotten me;
But years have passed—'tis fully ten—
And Mrs. B—— was my milliner then!

CANINE VILLAINS.

The "Bunjara" the Fiercest and Meanest of all Dogs.

The "Bunjara," a dog from twenty-four to twenty-eight inches in height at the shoulders, is beyond description the most ferocious of all the breeds of dogs that I have ever known. He is, like his master, a born villain. No coaxing or blandishments avail with him; he will tear and rend his best friend, and will devour his "sisters, his cousins or his aunts" with impunity. I say like his master, as the only persons who own "Bunjaras" are the criminal tribes, and principally the "Bunjara" tribe. Now, the "Bunjara" people, by their caste, are born rogues and vagabonds, and the more evil they can do, the more wrongs they can commit, the softer their bed and the more pleasurable their life in Valhalla when they die, which many say they seldom do—naturally. The "Bunjara" dog is like this, only more so. He is a cunning fox, an insatiable hater, a consummate villain, yet he has some good points. He can and will hold out to the last gasp; he never tires, and to one and only one does he ever give allegiance, and to him he sticks. Of women he is a despiser, regarding them as his master does—only as a "means to an end." In color he is dark brown or gray, shading to black; his coat is close, like a mastiff's, but tufted on the elbows and hocks, and feathered down inside of the fore-legs; his tail is carried low except when excited, and has a good deal of brush, especially at the tip; his ears are flat to the head, and only slightly raised on occasion.

He is used exclusively for hunting and only by natives—never by Europeans. The "Polygar" is a larger dog than the "Bunjara," standing from twenty-seven inches to thirty-one inches at the shoulder. He is not so ferocious, either, but has equally good pluck, and never gives in alive. In color he is bluish gray or dark gray. He is almost bare of hair, except on his head, which is covered with a fine coat, as sleek and soft as a mole's. He has bristles all over his body like a pig, and, in fact, his skin much resembles that of a dark-colored pig. His tail is fine, like a greyhound's, and he has more or less of greyhound ears. For hunting purposes and as a guard he is excellent, and more reliable than the "Bunjara," not having such a spice of the devil in him. He is used both by natives and Europeans, and principally for hunting the tiger and panther. He is most faithful to his master, and capable of being trained to many useful purposes.

There is another breed of dogs which combines the blood of all and sundry. He seems to have got the character of a very bad fellow, for if you want to annoy a man you can not do it better than by calling his dog a "Junglee dog." In many cases his tail is long, fine and curls like a coil of rope; in some he is, like the Maux cat, minus. A man I knew had an English terrier, and also tied up in his hut a "Bunjara." One day a shikara from the country reviled the terrier. "Ha! ha!" said he. "Junglee, Junglee dog." "Ho! ho!" said "Bunjara" man. "Ho! ho!" "You wait." He darted in and fetched the "Bunjara," who immediately set on the shikara with the utmost ferocity. This man for years had the marks of the struggle. Having been at last torn from his human victim he set on to and in five seconds killed the terrier, the cause of all the row, which having done he bolted with him in his mouth out of the village and into the jungle, never to return.—Stock-Keeper.

A Lover of Candor.

Impecunious man—I wish you would be so kind as to lend me five dollars. I'll pay you back in a few days.

Candid friend—If you had asked me for a loan in a candid and straightforward manner I would have lent you the money, but asking me in the way you did causes me to distrust you.

"I don't understand you."

"You asked me to be so kind as to lend you five dollars."

"Yes."

"If you had been candid you would have said to me: 'Be so stupid, be such an ignominious ass, such a hopeless idiot as to lend me five dollars,' and you might have got it.'—Texas Siftings.

A Romantic and Extraordinary Story

Doctor A. Anderson, formerly a physician of Bodie, now practicing in Monterey county, relates the following very extraordinary circumstance. "In the year 1884, while practicing my profession as a physician in Bodie, I was called upon to go and see a lady who was suffering intense pain and torture. I found the patient with but little febrile symptoms, but with considerable tenderness over the abdomen. On questioning the patient, I was informed that she had been suffering as she then was for over ten days, and had it not been for the positive determination and anxious desire of her husband to have her get relief, she never would have sent for medical aid; and that even now she was opposed to taking anything, as she was firmly of the belief that her case was beyond the reach of a physician to help. Beyond making that statement I was unable to gain any further knowledge of her case. I could not form any diagnosis of the case at that time, so contented myself by giving a hypodermic injection of morphine, and telling her I would call again in four or five hours. Before returning the second visit, I was fully of the opinion that the woman had taken something with suicidal intent, and when I returned I found that my patient had two hours sleep, caused by the drug I gave her. As soon as I saw her she commenced crying. I then told her my belief about her case, and in reply she said:

"Doctor, I have a secret which I want to impart to you, and which I want you to promise not to reveal to any one, on account of my two little girls; and I don't want my husband to know of it." She then told me the following story, which I believe to be true in every respect.

"When I got married in Utah, I was in love with a handsome young man not of my faith. He was a Protestant, and you know it is against our religion to marry out of the Jewish faith; so I was compelled by my father to marry Mr. H——, who was at that time well off and is still, as you know he is worth about $30,000. I felt that it was a sale of my body and soul. My husband is very kind to me and indulgent, and there is nothing I want but what comes freely. After coming to Bodie, my first love died; after which, I formed the acquaintance of Harry ——, who was employed by the Standard Mining Company, and whom I learned to love with greater intensity than the first. Harry had saved some $9,000 from his earnings, and we made up a plan to elope. Harry gave me $3,000 and I left for San Francisco, and by urgent letters I had him follow me sooner than he intended to. The day after his arrival in the city he was taken down with pneumonia and died. I feel that I am the cause of his death, and I have tried to kill myself by swallowing broken glass and crockery ware, nails, pins and pens. It took me two days to swallow it; I would chew bread and place the glass in it and swallow it. I feel that my whole insides are cut to pieces and I know that some of the glass is now in my lower bowel. Harry had some $6,000 sewed in his coat, all in gold notes, and when his brother looked for it, it was gone. I have my opinion where it has gone, for I understand Mr. —— is spending money freely, and we know he had none before. Now, what had I better do with the money he gave me?"

I told her to give it to Harry's brother, of course; but in the first place, we must try and see what we can do to save you. Indeed, I felt that the chance for her recovery was very small. So as to remove the glass from the rectum, I had to give chloroform. If I had not, I don't know how I could have kept the secret from her husband, but as he could not remain in the room while chloroform was being administered, I had an opportunity to keep her secret from him. I removed nineteen ounces the first operation, and the following day about half a pound. The bowel was literally packed for five inches up. I sent the nineteen ounces of glass and crockery in a bottle to Dr. Taylor, Professor of Surgery, Geary St., and he wrote to me, stating that he had shown the bottle to his colleagues and that they thought there must be some mistake about it. I have forgotten my reply to the Doctor, but I suppose they are still of the same opinion.

To return to the patient, and to be brief, she lingered along for some six weeks and recovered. While I was in attendance the husband clandestinely brought in an old and respected physician of Bodie, who is now dead, and he pronounced the case bilious colic. The lady and I had many a quiet laugh over the old gentleman's diagnosis of the case; but the result of the old doctor's opinion made all the Israelites of the town my enemies, because they believed I was keeping the woman sick to make a big bill against her husband; and so firmly was he of that belief that before he paid me my bill, I had to threaten him with an attachment. I kept her secret until she told it to a dear friend; then my star was in the ascendancy. The lady is still alive and well, but has left the State of California.

Reduced prices are offered to early subscribers for complete sets, which are to consist of 30 or more volumes, the volumes being issued at intervals of about a month. The work is not sold either by book sellers or agents, but only by the publishers direct, which in some measure accounts for the wonderfully low prices.

A gang of political theives had long controlled the government of Sacramento. The gang was divided into two wings or "shifts" as miners would say. One gang called itself "democratic"; the other called itself "republicans", but this was the only difference between them. Last week there was an election for officers for the city; the "shift" bosses had met and named their creatures as candidates; but on election day decent citizens ignored mere party names; joined together and elected honorable and capable men to the various offices. The shift bosses were utterly routed. This is a good example to follow.

A Philadelphia merchant says that, in opening the mail in the morning, he always reserves for the last those letters which have "The Honorable" prefixed to the address. His experience has been that in nine cases out of ten they are written by persons who ask some favor, and make use of the prefix in a mild attempt at flattery.

"I have not personally visited the vile places of the city for the purpose of afterward preaching about them," said he; "that is too thin." Whereupon the congregation audibly smiled.

Indications now point to the existence of a submarine volcanic crater between the Canary Islands and the coast of Portugal. From a cable laying steamer in 39 degs. 25 mins. north, 9 degs. 54 mins. west, the water was found to measure 1,300 fathoms under the bow and 800 under the stern, showing the ship to be over the edge of a deep depression in the ocean bottom. The well known great inequalities in the bed of the Sea of Lisbon are thought to be due to a submarine chain of mountains.

Swinburne, who contributes to the Athenæum a rather enigmatic little poem headed "May, 1885," will have in the Nineteenth Century for January an article called "Dethroning Tennyson." It sets forth that he has been intrusted with the papers of a lady languishing in Hanwell asylum who devoted many years to proving that Tennyson's poems were written by Darwin.

Mme. Limouzin will shortly give to the world a volume in which she will put all her enemies in the pillory. The book will be called by its ambitious authoress "Les Chatiments," unless the heirs of Victor Hugo choose to object to such a profanation, and it will no doubt prove to future chroniclers and historians a curious if not valuable "human document" concerning men and manners under the third republic.

WHAT THEY WEAR.

Watered velvet is the thing in millinery.

Rejoice, O womankind; sable is not so high this year.

Cloth princesse gowns demand trimming of fur, as their make up forbids drapery.

The large pouf at the back, so long disfiguring draperies, is now pronouncedly bad style.

The very newest seal coats are short at the back, with the long fronts deeply bordered with fox fur.

For very little folk, hoods of chinchilla, with lining and loops of shell pink, are the highest fashion.

Diamond pins jeweled both at point and head are now fashionable, worn thrust carelessly in the hair.

Half low shoes of bronze, patent leather, French kid or suede, are preferred to slippers for evening wear.

The merry thought and peacocks' feathers in diamonds and emeralds, are among new designs for brooches.

A wide front panel, or one at each side, is newer and better style than the single one that has become chronic.

In front draperies, a go-as-you-please center, with some pleats, either hand, is the correct thing for silk or woolen.

A new bangle is elastic—opening for the hand, then springing to the arm—just warranted not to get out of order.

Walking shoes of Angora kid, made over lasts delightfully big and square toed, are deriguer—"for which relief much thanks."

Hats are segregating themselves into two distinct species—low, with wide brims, and steeple like, with a bare suspicion of projection.

Smart looking fur capes are either plastrons across the chest or in the shape of a habit skirt, with epaulets and loops of cord passamenteries.

Red riding habits are the latest elegant economy of Parisian equestriennes, who must otherwise sport the color of the entertainer of the hour.

RULES FOR GETTING RICH.

The best merchant is he whose business talent is of the highest order and improved to the highest pitch.

Of all quarrels, the most senseless, the most bootless, the most worrying, is a quarrel with your circumstances.

Every man has three characters—that which he exhibits, that which he has and that which he thinks he has.

Half of the heavy hearts and broken spirits and sleepless eyes among our merchants might be spared were they only willing to conform their appearances to their substance.

Many merchants object too much, consult too long, advertise too little, and seldom drive business home to the full period, but content themselves with a mediocrity of success.

Some men seem to take failure quite comfortably; they stop and go on again, without changing their style of living or lowering their heads. That is a fact that no honest business man can admire.

In business there are many who cannot rise, many who cannot help descending, many who of necessity fail, many who earn their bread, and many who only waste it when once in their own hands.

The true merchant feelings will make you respected or despised, but trifles, little attentions, mere nothings, either gone or neglected, will make you either liked or disliked in the general run of the world.

The true merchant is not the man who best understands his business and contrives to bargain others out of their reasonable profits, but he who best understands his business and never takes advantage of any man's ignorance or any man's necessity.

"Leading articles" in commerce, like leading articles in journalism, are meant to make a character for the whole. But it is questionable whether a merchant is justified in taking such modes of attracting the attention of the public unless he has natural advantages to back it.—New York Herald and Express.

TAKE—SIMMONS
LIVER REGULATOR

For all Diseases of the
Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Spleen.

This purely vegetable preparation, now so celebrated as a Family Medicine, originated in the South in 1828. It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. ## DIED.

LEVY—At San Francisco, March 17, 1888, Wolf Levy, a native of Melislore, Prussia, aged 69 years and 6 months.

Billy Hedge is suffering from a severe illness.

The miners have all come in from the White Hill.

Mr. E. Crocker, of Big Pine, was in town at the beginning of the week.

The Nevada State Republican Covention will be held at Winnemucca on April 28th.

The California Republican State Convention will be held at Sacramento on May 1st.

Jack Davis was in town last Thursday. There is talk of his quitting the freighting business.

Mr. A. N. Bell is reported to be very ill; he has been laid up during the past week or more.

Dr. Woodin as health officer got official information last week of the death from small-pox of a man at Candelaria.

Mr. B. F. Leete says that fourteen hundred dollars is all that is necessary to test the question if artesian water can be found in Owens valley.

Mr. P. W. Forbes will ask the nomination as the Democratic candidate for District Attorney. The Republicans will probably nominate Mr. George M. Gill.

Keeler can now boast of the best ball room orchestra in the county. Their hornpipes, jigs, strathspeys and reels put life and mettle in the heels of old and young.

Luke Reegan, a miner from Darwin, was admitted to citizenship last Monday. John P. Smith was admitted to citizenship on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Leete, of Reno, arrived at Independence last Monday. Mrs. Leete went north again on Thursday morning but Mr. Leete will remain here some days yet.

Mr. J. H. Crockwell, the photographer, is now at Big Pine; he will be at Independence about the 1st of next month. Mr. Crockwell has made a good record above and may relied upon to give eminent satisfaction here.

The business of the Carson Mint is rapidly growing. For the thirteen days from the first of the present month the gold and silver bullion deposited at the mint amounted to $110,717.97.

Mr. Israel Luce is now at the marble quarries in Vermont studying the machinery in use there for working marble with a view of opening up similar works at the Inyo marble quarry.

Mr. N. G. Fairman, Superintendent of the Suprise Mining Company, at Panamint and Mr. F. J. Wall, Secretary for the Company, left Panamint a few days ago for San Francisco. They went by way of Mojave.

Two or three years dicipline and self denial would make another man of John L. Sullivan; but John L. would have to become another man before he would practice the self denial and submit to the dicipline

Wolf Levy, the father of Henry Levy, of Independence, died at San Francisco last Saturday. The deceased was a native of Peussia but had lived many years in this State; he was aged sixty-nine and a half years.

The right man in the right place, Hall, of Keeler, as Manager of a ball room. Under his guidance the most inexperienced have no difficulty in going through every evolution of the dance, and the most experienced find new pleasure in dancing.

Last Monday in the House of Representatives a bill was passed authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue silver certificates of the denominations of 25 15 and 10 cents. The vote in favor of the bill was 178 against 69.

Last Monday a collision occurred between two freight trains on the C. P. railroad between Cisco and Tamarack. A man named John Ticker was instantly killed and several others were badly injured. Four engines were badly wrecked and snow sheds injured.

Mr. John Baxter had a nice marble monument erected over the grave of his little child at the Odd Fellows' Cemetery a few days ago. The monument was made by Mr. Al. Studinger at the marble quarry. The design is very appropriate and the material beautiful.

Nevada papers report that more grain and alfalfa is being planted this year than ever before. The agricultural resources of the State are slowly but surely growing in importance; this gives far more certainty of permanent prosperity than any mining speculations.

The Board of Supervisors at their last special meeting adopted the rules now in use by the Sacramento Board of Road One of these rules is that before children will be allowed to attend public schools evidence of vaccination must be given. This rule is now in force here.

Mr. Henry Melone got back from Death valley last Thursday. He did his work well as Deputy Assessor, and made the long journey as plessantly as could be expected. He is deeply grateful to Mr. Neuschwander, Superintendent of Coleman's borax works, and to Mr. Maynard, the foreman, for most cordial welcome, generous hospitaity during his stay and kind assistance given him in his work as Assessor.

The first animal weighed on Irwin's new platform was a colt belonging to Mr. W. S. Enos. The colt is eight months old and weighed 680 pounds. The sire and dam were both imported from England; they are called "Shire". The dam is owned by Mr. Enos; the sire is owned by Mr. Moddow, of Sacramento, and has taken first premium at the California State fair three years in succession.

The Republican State Central Committee have resolved that the delegates to the National Convention from California shall go uninstructed to vote for any particular candidate. Not one of the possible Republican candidates for the Presidency is so preeminent over all others in merit, or has such popularity as would warrant any state in sending delegates to the convention instructed to vote for him "first last and all the time."

More Raidroad News.

Rumors of railroad extension keep coming; here is what the Esmeralda News says. The extension of the Carson and Colorado railroad south has been frequently mentioned, by reports of interviews with different officials and owners in the road, yet the matter has not taken any definite shape. The employes of the company are at work repairing construction, office and general accommodation cars as if intending them for immediate use in the operation of extending the road. There is also a well-grounded report that a repair and machine shop and also a foundry is to be constructed in Hawthorne. Next Monday a small crew of men will take the recently repaired train on to Keeler, the present terminus of the road, and there finish the repair of other similar cars used in constructing a road. There has also been a survey of the proposed route south as far as Mojave. All this preparation looks as if the company meant business and that very soon the work of extension will be commenced, and when began will be steadfastly prosecuted to completion.

The Tomino Ball.

The band boys were given a good attendance at their party on Monday evening. The band boys have grown greatly in favor with the townspeople and everybody is much interested in their success and willing to aid them. The experience of Monday evening would suggest that it would be better in future not to have any masking. We are all so well known to each other that five minutes after entering the ball room every masker is known to every other person in the room; therefore as a disguise the costume is a failure; and not only a failure but a dismal failure, for it prevents that chat and liveliness that make the greatest part of the enjoyment of our social gathrings. The boys reaped a good reward for their efforts and their evident desire to please will ensure the success of any ball they may give in the future. The Band desires to return thanks for the generous assistance of the ladies of the vicinity with the supper.

At Panamint.

A difficulty occured at Panamint at the beginning of this week between the miners employed there and the Superintendent of the mines. Some delay happened in the transmission of funds so that Mr. Fairman was not able to pay the men on the day they expected their money. This caused some grumbling and Mr. Fairman at once turned over to the men an amount of bullion then in the mill of value more than enough to cover all that was due them. This gave entire satisfaction to the men. Mr. Fairman has gone to San Francisco and will doubtless make such arrangements as will prevent a like trouble in future. The present difficulty may have arisen from the interruption of all kinds of business caused by the great railroad strikes.

New Store Room.

Mr. Muth-Rasmussen is building a storage room for honey at his apiary at Camp Independence. The building will have double walls so as to secure an even temperature as near as possible. It will be provided with shelves where many thousands of pound sections filled with honey can be stored. When the shelves are filled then sulphur will be turned in the room; two fumigations will be given and then the honey will keep in a perfect condition for an indefinite time. Mr. Muth Rasmussen is making a large addition to his apiary and will have much more honey for market than ever before.

Mr. D. Crough will superintend arrangements for a picnic to be given on the last day of school at Camp Independence, being about the 20th of next month. Further particulars and the date will be published as soon as made known. The Fort picnics are always a success and this will be no exception to the rule.

Last Monday Thomas Brady, Guardian for the daughter of Duncan Campbell, deceased, appeared to Court and by counsel objected to Executors of will of said Campbell granting lease of property at Big Pine. A demurrer to petition of Executors for leave to lease said real estate having been filed, was argued, and was overruled by the Court.

For some days past a rumor has been current that Mr. J. E Shepherd would be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Sheriff. Mr. Shepherd says he will not make any canvass in advance to secure the nomination; his name will be offered to the Convention and if the nomination is given him he will accept. In the whole county of Inyo there is not a more respectable and worthy young man than El. Shepherd.

The largest delegation that ever went from Independence attended the party at Keeler on the eve of Saint Patrick's day. The best comment on the character of the party was the declaration of every one of the delegation, that they would never willingly miss another party at Keeler. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes did all that was possible to secure the pleasure of their guests, and succeeded. From Lone Pine, Cerro Gordo Darwin and other points many people attended and all were alike well pleased.

At Murphy's and San Andreas, Calaveras county, a disease which the local physicians said was chicken-pox broke out among the children. No quarantine was established and the disease spread and proved to be small-pox. At San Diego and Los Angeles small-pox is reported to be spreading rapidly again. The prompt measures taken for our own protection appear to be effectual. Health Officer Woodin says there is not a case of small-pox in Owens valley.

Mr. J. D. Chanell and partner have bought some mining claims in Wild Rose district and are now building a five stamp mill there. The mill is located about thirty miles east from Darwin in a direct line; but by wagon road the distance is sixty-five miles. There is plenty of wood and water at the location. Mr. Chanell was at Independence last Monday getting some supplies; he said work would be pushed as vigorously as possibie on the mill.

A few days ago Doctor Woodin, Health Officer, had a communication from State Superintendent Hoyt in reference to vaccination of school children. Mr. Hoyt says he does not know of any law compelling the vaccination of school children; but pupils who are suffering from any contagious disease, or who are exposed to contagion from such disease, may be excluded from the public schools. This means that children who are not vaccinated may be excluded from school by authority of the Health Officer.

The Bridgeport Chronicle-Union has the following to say of the District fair. "The time of holding the Fair for Agricultural District No. 18, comprising the counties of Alpine, Inyo and Mono, will be the beginning of the third week in September, the 17th. It is to be held at Independence, Inyo county, and the fact that the Fair held last year was so well managed and appreciated as to prove a success is sufficient incentive to induce exhibitors to continue the good work by making this one a credit to the Directors and the District."

American Markets for Americans.

The following article on the policy of protection for American industries is by Mr. B. F. Leete, of Reno, Nevada.

"That which was policy for the original thirteen sparsely populated, feeble States, with few people, small wealth, little or no internal commerce, and no manufactures, must be expanded to fit a nation of thirty-eight States and six populous and wealthy Territories, really equal to forty-four States, with sixty millions of people and fifty billions of wealth, increasing a million a year in population and more than a billion per annum in property. Originally, the paramount object of the tariff was to protect investments in manufacturing plants in our country against the tyranny of capital similarly invested in European states. Henry Brougham in the British House of Commons, in April, 1833, discussing the growth of manufacturing industries of the United States said" "It is well worth while to incur a loss upon the first exportation, in order, by glut, to stifle in the cradle those rising manufactures in the United States which the war had forced into existence contrary to the natural course of things." When protection has been most discreetly extended our national prosperity has been the greatest, and under the Morill tariff our prosperity has been phenominal, inaugurating and building up industries before unknown to our people, notably the manufacture of steel. In about the year 1863 there was not a steel plant in the United States. To-day we lead the world in the manufacture of steel, and having more steel, we have cheaper steel than any other people. Cotton fabrics are cheaper in New York than they are in Manchester, England, while our tariff on cotton goods is nearly equal to the value of the fabrics. All other protected pursuits have been similarly promoted, until we have become the largest producing and manufacturing nation in the world, while in ratio of population and production we are the smallest distributing nation. Our surplus productions and manufactures are lying idle in our warehouses or taking damage for want of market; our looms and furnaces inactive, our resources undeveloped, and our labor idle and the revenues of our government accumulating and lying idle in our treasury. Shall we stop development, stop production and manufacture, and lay labor idle, or shall we inaugurate a policy commensurate with the power, skill, intelligence, population, and wealth of the nation, and in furtherence and promotion of the general welfare? What do we need? Clearly a current, active distribution of our surplus productions of soil, mine, and manufacture to all the nations of the world. A policy that will put in motion every reaper, every shuttle, and every loom, and set aglow every furnace, and furnish trade to all our people.

How? By paying a tonnage premium of at least one hundred million dollars per annum, for American ships built by American men out of American material, and manned by American seamen, and employed in deporting and distributing our surplus productions and manufactures to all the markets of the world, as we now distribute with our railroads our produce and manufactures to all the markets of our States. And let it be understood that all our productions and manufactures are to be shipped in our own ships, just as we do our interstate distribution with our railroads. The source of our great revenue, the tariff tax, is invisible and falls alike upon all, so a policy to pay a tonnage premium for American shipping to deport and market the surplus in the marts of the world would reach every avocation and stimulate every pursuit in our broad land, and enable every person to make a good day's work for himself, and that makes general prosperity and insures the general welfare. Then let us keep up the protection of our national industries, develop our great resources, and supply the nations of the world, and pay out currently the accruing revenue, promoting such distribution and promoting the general welfare.

B. F. LEETE.

Mr. Bob. Wimberly came up from Keeler on Tuesday morning and remained in town during the week.

Mitchell appears to have got over his fear of Sullivan. As he was not knocked out, as he surely expected to be, he now appears to think he can beat Sullivan and is reported to have challenged him to fight in a sixteen fott ring for a purse of $5,000 a side. In their last encounter, although Sullivan failed to knock Mitchell out, yet every time the former get a blow planted on the latter he went down like a shot. Should they meet again it is probable that Sullivan will be in better condition and will know better how to meet the tactics of Mitchell. If there should be a square fight there need be little doubt that Sullivan will conquer.

Last Monday in Hartshorne's Hotel, at Bishop Creek Frank Williams and a man named House, a stranger in the place, quarreled over a game of cards. Williams accused House of cheating by having too many cards in his hand; he presented a pistol at House and demanded the money, which the latter had picked up. House caught Williams by the hand and a struggle ensued, during which the weapon was discharged wounding House in the leg, but not seriously. That ended the matter. No arrests.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.

JOHN C. EVANS, SPOOTSWOOD, MO., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer gives more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take as much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house, if they had to take the feathers from under their wife and babies to pay for it."

JOHN R. DODGE, JR., jeweler, Norwalk, Ind., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. 1st. It is the best machine ever invented by man. 2d. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. 3d. If you run short, you can not buy ears for $100."

I will ship a sample to thos. desiring an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best washer in the world for saving labor, clothes and soap. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.

OREGON WILD CATTLE.

The Strange Breed That Inhabits the Top of the Umpqua Mountains.

"California sportsmen can now go up to Oregon and shoot wild cattle," said John Day, an Umpqua mountain pioneer, referring to the completion of the railroad. "It is a fact that there are hundreds of wild cattle in the high hills skirting the Umpqua valley, and some of them are not more than a couple of miles from the railroad track. Some of these cattle, too, are 25 years old or more. In the mountains near Riddles and Rosebud they are probably the thickest, but they do not venture down in the valley much. They stay in the tops of the hills and get water from the living springs which rise there. For the most part they are concealed in the dense growth of oak and fir in these mountains. There is heavy underbush, too, so that it is a hard matter to get on to them. They go in bands of six or eight usually, but at night a herd of forty or fifty get together and lie down in the same yard—that is, they sleep on the same spot, which is usually a secluded place among the trees. A band of wild cattle have been known to get together on a cleared place like this every night for a couple of years.

"When feeding there are always a few bulls to act as sentinels. While the cattle graze in bands of half a dozen or so, they are nevertheless close to other bands, so that at any alarm from any one of the bulls, which leisurely feed on higher ground, they all run away together.

"The cattle are of all colors and wilder than deer. It is a hard matter to get a shot at them for the reason that their scent is so keen. They can smell a man a long distance off. They got wild in 1853 when the old man Riddles and two or three others of the first settlers came to the valley. Their cows wandered off and could not be found. After two or three years, all the pioneers had to do when they wanted beef was to rig out two or three pack animals and go up into the mountains. The cattle had to be killed on sight the same as deer or bear, for they could no more be driven down than deer could. Once killed they were quartered, packed on the horses, and carried down. They have been hunted a good deal of late years, so that there are not as many as there used to be.

"Some of the cattle are very large and fat. I have caught glimpses of bulls in the top of the Umpqua hills that astonished me. A bull I saw in the fall of '78 on the head of the Rogue river I am certain would weigh 1,400 pounds. There is good grazing in the mountains all the year round. A peculiarity about these cattle is that their eyes and horns are jet black. The retina, iris and the whole apple of the eye are one mass of black. You can't distinguish any difference in any part of it. The horns, too, while being black as ink, are long and very sharp. Brought to bay, the Oregon wild cattle are very wicked fighters."—San Francisco Examiner.

Old Times in Louisiana.

Those "society balls" were conducted with great propriety and reserve. The claim of every person of both sexes to be admitted having been previously determined by the responsible and trusty committee, there was a sort of temporary and conventional equality on the terpsichorean floor, and, therefore, every gentleman had the privilege to invite a lady without the formality of an introduction to figure in the dance as his partner. After it was over he escorted her back respectfully to her seat, without presuming, if unknown and not duly presented, to remain standing before her, or to sit by her side, to continue the conversation or prolong the accidental acquaintance.

During the intervals of dancing the gentlemen walked up and down between the rows of ladies that densely lined the hall, some merely bowing as they passed to those whom they knew and others stopping to converse. No woman, married or single, joined in this promenading with a male companion, as is the custom in these present days, and the eye of a lynx could not have detected the slightest flirtation. The word itself was not known, for the thing it means is for Louisiana a modern invention, which had not then been patented and brought out for public use. In fact, this peculiar pastime would have been impossible to attempt. It would have produced a social earthquake.—American Magazine.

The Color of the Sea.

Artists always seem at a loss to deal with the color of the sea, and few are those who please the public. Professor Tyndall has come to their aid. He recognizes three principal hues in sea waves—blue, green and yellow. Solid particles held in the water act as minute mirrors reflecting the light which penetrates the liquid. The rays which are sent out, after having traversed only a thin stratum of water, preserve their yellow parts; but if the reflections are attenuated the water appears green; and if they do not exist at all, the sea being clear and free from muddy matters, the color is deep blue. In an indigo sea the crest of the waves will appear green on account of their lack of thickness. Seaweed, animalcules and other local or accidental causes may have much influence on the color of the water.—Court Journal.

Girls' Social Distinctions.

An amusing thing about these girls is that they keep up social distinctions. A collar girl does not associate with a cotton mills girl. Neither will they have a laundry girl for a friend. The laundry girls think they are better than the cotton mill girls, though this is disputed, while both recognize the superiority of the collar girls. The collar girls have their own sets, according to the character and quality of their work. The new assemblymen are ignorant of this intricate social code, and make many embarrassing mistakes at first by giving suppers to which they invite cotton mill girls from Cohoes and collar girls from Troy.—New York Sun.

Cases of Nutmeg Poisoning.

Some people doubt the poisonous effect of nutmeg, but several cases of nutmeg poisoning have been noted in The British Medical Journal during the past summer. A whole nutmeg was taken in four of the cases, and five whole ones in the remaining case. In still another case, the use of half a nutmeg in a hot drink was nearly fatal.—Boston Budget.

Powder for the Shoes.

A powder is used in the German army for sifting into the shoes and stockings of the foot soldiers. It is called "fusstreupulver," and consists of three parts salicylic acid, ten parts starch and eighty-seven parts pulverized soapstone (speckstein). It keeps the feet dry, prevents chafing and rapidly heals sore spots. It is to be recommended to mountaineers.—Boston Budget.

—In the cemetery at Monosha, O., is a tombstone of sixteen tons, cut in the form of a tree, with birds and squirrels lodged in its branches, and ferns, flowers, an open book, and a scroll of music at the base.

THE POULTRY YARD.

Valuable Hints to Beginners in the Chicken-Raising Business.

To those who have a large number of hens, but who prefer the incubator when hatching, I would suggest the following plan, which has been used with good results in a number of instances of which I am aware: A few hens can always be found which show a desire to sit. Instead of breaking those up set them all, giving each hen as many eggs as she can possibly cover, and then prepare your incubator for action. At the end of five days test all the eggs you have set, and place the fertile ones in the incubator, laying them flat, and mark the date of setting on each egg. If the tray is not filled, use a few glass eggs to fill up, or fit a light piece of wood across which will prevent their rolling about. At the same time you remove the tested eggs from the hens, reset them with fresh ones, and at the end of another five days again use your tester and place the fertile eggs in the incubator, marking, as before, the date. These may be placed in the same tray with the first lot, if it is not already full. Repeat the operation as long as the constitutions of the hens will stand it, or until you have all the eggs set you care for. If the nests are thoroughly cleaned and supplied with fresh straw every ten days, and the hens kept free from vermin, and are supplied with plenty of corn and wheat, with fresh water daily, they may be kept sitting for six or eight weeks without injury. Taking seven weeks as the average time each sits, during this time each hen can be reset ten times, and if thirteen eggs are given, will cover during the entire period 130 eggs. The chief advantage of this system is that a larger percentage of chicks can be realized than if the incubator alone be used. There seems to be something in the steady heat and contact of the hen which is more successful in giving the eggs a good start than can be obtained in the best of incubators; and after they are once well started it is comparatively an easy matter to carry them along to a successful hatch. I would recommend that each lot of eggs be sprinkled with warm water, commencing at the eighteenth day of incubation, and continuing at each turning until the hatching takes place. In order to keep the chicks from crawling about too promiscuously, take four pieces of pasteboard about four inches wide, and make a frame which will confine them to their reservation. To fasten the frame at the corners use pieces of cloth and a little glue or paste.

I have been asked the question, "Do you think it a good plan to help the chicks out of the shell if they are unable to get out alone?" If a chick is unable to work his way out without assistance it either lacks vitality or has developed at the wrong end of the egg. In the former case it is very likely that the chick will be short-lived if assisted, while in the latter a number may be saved. When the chipping is noticed at the small end of the egg opposite the air-cell, the head of the chick is turned the wrong way and it has not the room to work. A little assistance in such cases often results in saving a strong chick. I will add a few words about nests and setting hens. If possible have a separate house in which to set your hens. This should be well ventilated and have a small covered yard attached. The nests should be made in separate boxes, and filled with straw enough to keep the eggs off the bottom of the box. At least every ten days take the boxes outside, light the straw and invert the boxes over the straw until they are pretty thoroughly scorched. Refill with fresh straw and replace the eggs. In the yard have a good sized box containing sand or road dust, in which mix several handsful of sulphur flour; also have pans or troughs, which keep filled with corn or wheat, and a drinking fountain filled with fresh water.—California Cackler.

"Inspection" in the Regular Service.

"But I want to tell you it isn't alone the musket carrier who shirks. That's a faculty which creeps in once in a while over in the officers' quarters. If this were not true, the privates couldn't 'soldier' so successfully.

"How?"

"Well, take it on 'inspection,' for instance. I'll venture to say that knapsacks are not carefully inspected more than once out of fifty inspections made at the various posts in a year. I had a knapsack which I packed in the spring of 1876, and I never unpacked it until I left the army."

"Where did you keep your clothes?"

"In my box."

"What was in your knapsack?"

"Old togs. It's an old gag, and works beautifully. You take a pair of trousers and a pair of drawers. Fold them together with the legs alternating. Then you take an overcoat (of course these are old clothes which have been cast aside) and leave out the cape and possibly the sleeves. The idea is to use as little material as possible, but fold it in such a way that the colors—blue, white, gray, etc.—will 'show up' regulation fashion. Take an old pair of shoes and cut them down until only the soles and counters are left. Polish up the counters and shove the things down into your knapsack and there you are. When your knapsack lies on the ground open she looks all right and snug and not worthy of more careful examination."

"But if you're caught at it?"

"Yes; I've been there. It was in the fall of '69, during my first term of service in the regulars. I forget now all about the punishment, but I know I was put in the dump—they were grading off a portion of the parade ground—as long as the work lasted, then I had police duty as a regular thing for about three months, and during the whole time had no passes to town."

"And yet you tried it again?"

"Of course. It's a sort of satisfaction to realize that you're getting the best of your superiors. It's funny when you don't get caught at it."—Detroit Free Press.

Origin of the Worth Family.

Neither facts nor figures could persuade a Lincolnshire dame that Worth, of Paris, can plan a frock fit to put on. In that English county of dark marsh and wet fens the Worth family originated, and they lived in one of its smallest and dullest villages. None of them were noted for intelligence. The head of the family was a butcher, and where the man dressmaker acquired his taste in color and eye for form is a mystery. The funniest part of all is that his old neighbors persist in speak of him as a kind of millinery mountebank, who juggles his customers into believing they see what doesn't exist.

—"I have found out why the falls at Niagara roar so loudly," said a returned tourist. "What is the reason?" "Why, they are trying to echo the report of the thundering charges made by the Canadian hotel pirates."—Hotel Mail.

—Mabel, what does your father do?" "He is a shoe merchant." "Does he deal in the kind of shoes he wears?" (thoughtfully). "Of course." "I think I'll have to patronize him. They are good strong shoes."—Merchant Traveler.

"Do you know, landlord, that none of the doors in this house will shut?" "New house, sir; new house, you know; takes time to settle." "Ah, then, there's a pair of us. I'm a new tenant; it takes time for me to settle, too. Good morning. Call again."—N. Y. Ledger.

FREAKS OF FORTUNE.

"I wonder how I should feel if I won $15,000 in the lottery?" is a remark one frequently hears.

David Stern, pawnbroker, 644 Clay street, is one man at least who has experienced the sensation of winning a fortune for a dollar. On Thursday he drew $15,000 from Wells, Fargo & Co's bank, his coupon, representing one-tenth of the capital prize of $150,000 in the January drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery, having been immediately honored. A CHRONICLE reporter, who heard of Mr. Stern's luck, sought the fortunate pawnbroker at his place of business, and found him in the act of emptying a huge sack of shining twenty-dollar pieces on a table in the rear of his establishment. Mr. Stern was, to say the least, somewhat excited. His usual swarthy countenance was white, and his dark eye blazed with strong emotion.

"Yes, I have won, 'said he, in a voice that was quite husky for the moment. "There is the money. I have just come from the bank with it."

He added that he had not counted it, but the information was scarcely necessary, for he was in no frame of mind to count anything. The $15,000 made a great heap of glistening gold, that clinked and glittered cheerfully as the Stern family ran their fingers through it. They seemed, as yet, to have scarcely realized their good fortune. They looked at the gold, and felt it, as if they expected to see it vanish like the fabric of a dream. But there was nothing intangible about the heap of yellow twenty-dollar pieces. Some of the money slipped from the table and rolled merrily along the floor, jingling as if delighted to have been freed from the restraint of the bank vaults. The toddling youngster on the floor filled his little hands with the valuable playthings, and seemed as much pleased with their touch as his older relatives, whose eyes were fixed on the table. Mrs. Stern was speechless, and could only clap her hands and smile at her lucky spouse. The latter was still too excited to think or act with habitual coolness. He walked from the gold laden table to the front door and back a dozen times in a minute without apparent purpose. Customers came in and looked around, but he seemed to see nothing but the glittering fortune that had come so suddenly. The news had spread outside, and relatives and friends dropped in till the gathering became so much a family one that the reporter concluded to withdraw for awhile. In an hour he returned. Mr. Stern had cooled down slightly and could talk coherently. He had put the money in bank after paying a few friends who were interested with him in a pool.

"The year has begun well for me, thank God," said he. "On Sunday last my boy, being 13 years old, was confirmed in our religion. On Monday we had a banquet, and he got many valuable presents, including bank books showing money deposited for him by friends. On Tuesday coming from school he stopped at the CHRONICLE bulletin-board and copied off the list of winning numbers in the Louisiana State Lottery, and rushed down to say, "Papa, you've won the $15,000." I couldn't credit it at first, but as soon as I looked over my list of numbers I saw the boy was right. Then I was afraid the ticket might not be genuine, but I soon learned that it was, and I had it cashed this morning."

Another inundation of friends and relatives flooded the store, and the reporter withdrew.

Oscar Nathan, an industrious barber on Hardy place, between Post and Sutter streets, held a tenth of ticket 85,045, which drew $5,000. He got his money an hour after Mr. Stern filled his sack at the bank.

The frequenters of the bar northeast corner of Clay and Kearny streets are in a ferment by reason of the fact that some old-timer has drawn another tenth of the capital prize and refuses to disclose his identity. Boniface Robinson, the presiding genius of the establishment, has been requested by an indignation meeting of his patrons to reveal the secret, but has refused. The place is frequented by lynx-eyed politicians and special policemen, and they are all watching one another for any eruption of diamond rings or indulgence in new clothes that would indicate the lucky prize-winner.

Colonel J. L. Wehr, a new arrival from Kansas City, is perhaps the most disgusted visitor on the Pacific Coast at present. Colonel Wehr, although an educator and apparently a most intelligent gentleman, is somewhat influenced by superstition. Before the January drawing of the Louisiana Lottery he invested $1 in a one-tenth coupon of ticket 73,185. Directly after getting the coupon the gallant Colonel ran full tilt on Kearny street against a cross-eyed woman. On the next block he met a funeral, and as the superstitious code of ill omens marks these as sure signs of bad luck, the Colonel concluded that his ticket was no more useless paper. Down the street he met his friend R. S. McCann, also of Kansas, and alluded laughingly to the ill omens.

"I'll put up half a dollar against it and shake you for it," said Mr. McCann.

McCann won the shake and pocketed the ticket, and a few days after the Colonel read on the CHRONICLE bulletin-board that the despised coupon had won the second prize, and McCann, who has gone to Humboldt to look at some land, is expected back in a few days.

T. N. Milcovich, better known as "Big Pete," the Bulgarian sportsman and proprietor of the United States Restaurant, on Broadway, Oakland, held a one tenth coupon of the capital prize. Nick was out exercising his greyhounds near Alameda and fell into a deep ditch. His lottery ticket having got thoroughly soaked through he put it on the cover of his large coffee pot to dry. The young Bulgarian apprentice, who has a free and easy Slavonian way of tossing things around, whipped off the cover of the coffee pot, and not knowing anything about the lottery ticket, managed to drop it into the seething Mocha without seeing it. When Big Pete got back from the front of the restaurant to examine his precious lottery ticket, there was a wild scene. He was nearly beside himself till the cook in emptying out the coffee-kettle found the ticket, but it was in such a condition that a microscope could scarcely decipher the number. It has been given to a competent chemist, who has undertaken to make it presentable for bank purposes. Meantime "Big Pete" sits on the top of one of the high stools in his coffee house, undecided whether to take off his coat and go to work or make arrangements for a trip to Europe. The apprentice who has been the cause of so much misery is hiding for his life in the hills back of Temescal.

John Foster, an employee in an Oakland brush factory on the creek, near the Broadway landing, won $500 in the January drawing, so that California fared well at the hands of the fickle goddess this month.—San Francisco Chronicle, Jan. 15.

SIMPLE HOME REMEDIES.

How to Treat Minor Ills Which Are of Almost Daily Occurrence.

Half a teaspoonful of common table salt dissolved in a little cold water and drank will instantly relieve "heart burn" or dyspepsia. If taken every morning before breakfast, increasing the quantity gradually to a teaspoonful of salt and a tumbler, it will in a few days cure any ordinary case of dyspepsia, if at the same time due attention is paid to the diet. There is no better remedy than the above for constipation. As a gargle for sore throat it is equal to chlorate of potash, and is entirely safe. It may be used as often as desired, and if a little is swallowed each time it will have a beneficial effect on the throat by cleansing it and allaying the irritation. In doses of one to four teaspoonsful, in half a pint to a pint of tepid water it acts promptly as an emetic, and, in cases of poisoning, is always on hand. It is an excellent remedy for bites and stings of insects. It is a valuable astringent in hemorrhages, particularly for bleeding after the extraction of teeth. It has both cleansing and healing properties, and is therefore a most excellent application for superficial ulcerations.

Mustard is another valuable remedy. No family should be without it. Two or three teaspoonfuls of ground mustard stirred into half a pint of water acts as an emetic very promptly, and is milder and easier to take than salt and water. Equal parts of ground mustard and flour or meal made into a paste with warm water and spread on a thin piece of muslin with another piece of muslin laid over it, forms the indispensable "mustard plaster." It is almost a specific for colic when applied for a few minutes over the "pit of the stomach." For all internal pains and congestions there is no remedy of such general utility. It acts as a counter-irritant by drawing the blood to the surface; hence in severe cases of croup a small mustard plaster should be applied to the back of the child's neck. The same treatment will relieve almost any case of headache. A mustard plaster should be moved about over the spot to be acted upon, for if left in one place it is liable to blister. A mustard plaster acts as well when at a considerable distance from the affected part. An excellent substitute for mustard plasters is what is known as "mustard leaves." They come a dozen in a box, and are about four by five inches. They are perfectly dry, and will keep for a long time. For use it is only necessary to dip one in a dish of water for a minute, and then apply it.

Common baking soda is the best of all remedies in cases of scalds and burns. It may be used on the surface of the burned place either dry or wet. When applied promptly the sense of relief is magical. It seems to withdraw the heat, and with it the pain, and the healing process soon commences. It is the best application for eruptions caused by poisonous ivy and other poisonous plants, as also for bites and stings of insects.—Hall's Journal of Health.

PEACE ON EARTH

Awaits that countless army of martyrs, whose ranks are constantly recruited from the victims of nervousness and nervous diseases. The price of the boon is a systematic course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the finest and most genial of tonic nervines, pursued with reasonable persistence. Easier, pleasanter, and safer this than to wash the vitiating secretions with pernicious stimulants, alcoholic or the reverse, beef extracts, nerve foods, narcotics, sedatives and poisons in disguise. "Tired Nature's sweet restorer balmy sleep," is the providential recompense of weak nerves, and this glorious franchise being usually the consequence of sound digestion and increased vigor, the great stomachic which insures both is peculiarly deserving of repute at the required time. Nothing refreshes as the mild fluid which uses it, but invigorates, clears head and tranquil. Use the bitters also in fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney troubles, constipation and biliousness.

Beloved, let us love so well
Our work shall be the better for our love,
And still our love be sweeter for our work;
And both commended for the sake of each
By all true lovers and true workers born.

All the art and taste of the best artists seems to have been combined in the magnificent package of imported Oleographic and Chromatic Cards which is being offered by the well known firm of Fleming Brothers, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

ST. JACOBS OIL

SCIATICA.

Misery.—It is instructive to note from the catalogue of diseases that nine-tenths of fatal cases reach their chronic stage through a stupid indifference to a correct treatment when the system is first assailed. It is easily shown that thousands of lives could be saved.

NERVOUS PAINS.

Torture.—For instance: SCIATICA, which so sorely afflicts the human family, and which is defined to be neuralgia of the sciatic nerve, rheumatism of the hip-joint, or parts adjoining it, hip gout, pains in the loins and hips, even in its mildest form never seizes its prey without due warning.

SYMPTOMS.

Acute.—Sudden and acute pains in the hip and limbs; redness, swelling, tenderness, soreness, fever, lameness and sometimes excruciating pains. The disease rapidly develops into chronic or inflammatory stage.

TREATMENT.

Cure.—Rub the parts affected thoroughly and vigorously with ST. JACOBS OIL; create a burning sensation by the friction of rubbing on the Oil; apply warmth; flannels wrung out in hot water.

WEAK LUNGS MADE STRONG.

Persons who stay in-doors all the time and lean over a counter or a desk, sooner or later discover that their lungs are giving out. Editors are often thus afflicted. Erastus R. Sutherland, editor of The Eastern State Journal, White Plains, New York, writes:

"I have used ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS in my family since 1868. In that year I had an attack of pneumonia from which I was not expected to recover. My lungs were left in a very weak state. I commenced using ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS, wearing them constantly three months, two on the breast and two on the back. The result was surprising, at least to me. The pains in my lungs had left me, and I felt like "a giant refreshed with new wine."

The man who smokes three for-fives must be in a very bad odor with his neighbors.

THE LADIES' FAVORITE.

The newest fashion in ladies' hats will doubtless cause a flutter of pleasurable excitement among the fair sex. Ladies are always susceptible to the changes of a fashion plate; and the more startling the departure, the more earnest the gossip over the new mode. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive cure for the ills which afflict females and make their lives miserable. This sovereign panacea can be relied on in cases of displacements and all functional derangements. It builds up the poor, haggard and dragged-out victim, and gives her renewed hope and a fresh lease of life. It is the only medicine for woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money refunded. ### THE CUTEST LITTLE THINGS.

"Cute"! he echoed. "Well, I don't know as the adjective would have occurred to me in just that connection. But if you mean that they do their work thoroughly, yet make no fuss about it; cause no pain or weakness, and, in short, are everything that a pill ought to be, and nothing that it ought not, then I agree that Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are about the cutest little things going!"

ITCHING PILES.

SYMPTOMS—moisture; intense itching and stinging; most at nights; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in many cases removes the tumors. It is equally efficacious in curing all Skin Diseases. DR. Mothers, Overworked Men, and for all diseases where the tissues are wasting away from the inability to digest ordinary food, or from overwork of the brain or body, all such should take SCOTT'S EMULSION of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. ### A Hardened Specimen.

Omaha Man—I sent you a communication yesterday stating that I had sent a ham to the starving family referred to in your columns.

Editor—Yes, I ordered it printed.

"It came out in the paper that I had 'stolen a ham from that starving family and was sorry for it.'"

"My gracious! It was a typographical error, of course. I sincerely hope you will believe me. Don't shoot."

"I was only reaching for my pocket handkerchief, sir, to wipe the tears of sympathy from my eyes. I know how you feel about it. I did not mind it. I only called to direct your attention to the blunder so it would be corrected."

"You did not mind such a horrible error as that?"

"Oh, no. I'm used to such things. I used to be an editor myself."—Omaha World.

MEN GROWING BIGGER.

Measurements Taken for Thousands of Garments Indicate This.

Last spring I received a letter from an English gentleman who is interested in anthropology and biology, asking me if there were any facts to sustain the impression abroad that the white man is deteriorating in size, weight and condition in the United States. It occurred to me, however, that since by far the greater part of the men of this country are clad in ready-made clothing, the experience of the clothiers might be valuable, and that from their figures of the average sizes of the garments prepared by them for men's use very clear deductions could be made as to the size of the American man. I therefore sent a letter to two clothiers in Boston, who have been long in the business, one in Chicago, one in New York, one in Baltimore, one in Detroit, one in Texas and one in Montreal. The information received in return is to this effect:

In any given 1,000 garments the average of all the returns is as follows: Chest measure, 38 inches; waist, 33½ inches; length of leg inside, 32½ inches; average height ranging from 5 feet 8½ to 5 feet 9 in New England, up to 5 feet 10 for the average at the South and West. A few deductions of weight are given, from which one can infer that the average man weighs between 155 and 160 pounds. These measures cover the average of the assorted sizes of garments which are made up by the thousand. There are a few small men who buy "youths' sizes," so-called, and a few larger men who buy "extra sizes."

My correspondent in Chicago states "that, so far as relates to the assertion that the race in this country deteriorates, our experience teaches us that the contrary is the case. We are now, and have for several years past been obliged to adopt a larger scale of sizes, and many more extra sizes in width as well as length, than were required ten years ago. I find that occupation and residence have a great deal to do with the difference in sizes, the average of the sizes required for the cities and large towns being much less than that required for the country. Again, different sections vary very much in those requirements. For instance, an experienced stock clerk will pick out for the South and Southwestern trade coats and vests, breast measure 35 to 40; trousers always one or two sizes smaller around the waist than the length of leg inside. For Western and Northern trade coats and vests, breast measure, 37 to 42; trousers, 33 to 40 waist; 30 to 34 length of leg inside."

My correspondent in Texas gives the average 38 inches chest, 33 to 34 inches waist, 32½ leg measure, 5 feet 10 inches height, adding: "We find that the waist measure has increased from an average of 32 to 33 inches during five years, and we think our people are becoming stouter built."

My correspondent in Baltimore had previously made the statement, to wit: "Since the late war we have noticed that the average-sized suits for our Southern trade have increased fully one inch around the chest and waist, while there has been no apparent change in the length of the trousers."

I asked this firm if the change could be due to the fact that the colored people had become buyers of ready-made clothing, but have for reply that the fact that the negroes are buying more ready-made clothing now than previous to the war accounts only in a small degree for the increase of the size, but is due almost entirely to the increased activity of the whites. The experience of this firm covers thirty-five years.

My correspondent in New York states that "for the last thirty years our clothing, numbering at least 750,000 garments yearly, has been exclusively sold in the Southern States. We find the average man to measure 37 inches around the chest, 32 to 33 around the waist, 33 to 34 inches of leg inside; average height, 5 feet 10 inches. The Southerner measures more in the leg than around the waist—a peculiarity in direct contrast to the Western man, who measures more around the waist than in the leg."

My correspondent in Canada gives the following details; experience covers twenty years; about 300,000 garments a year:

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Breast measure.. | 36 | 37 | 38 | 39 | 40 | 41 | 42 | 44 |
| Waist measure... | 32 | 33 | 34 | 35 | 36 | 37½ | 39 | 42 |
| Cut per 1,000 of these sizes..... | 80 | 160 | 240 | 240 | 140 | 60 | 60 | 20 |
| Average weight for each..... | 140 | 150 | 160 | 168 | 175 | 180 | 200 | 225 |

My correspondent in Detroit says: "We notice marked peculiarities in regions where dwell people of one nationality. The Germans need large waists and short legs, the French small waists and legs, the Yankees small waists and long legs, the Jews medium waists and short legs. We have found a decided demand for larger sizes than formerly.—Clothier and Furnisher.

Exact Weight of a Fly.

James Spencer, a Chattanooga grocer, being greatly troubled by flies, put twenty-one sheets of sticky fly-paper about his store. In the evening he gathered them up, and noticed how much heavier they were, being covered with flies. He weighed the twenty-one sheets and found they weighed seven pounds. Then he put twenty-one fresh sheets on the scales and they weighed four pounds four ounces. Thus the flies weighed two pounds twelve ounces. He found that there were twenty flies to each square inch of the fly-paper; each sheet had 336 square inches and 6,720 flies, and the twenty-one sheets had 141,120 flies. Thus one may ascertain the weight of a fly; for if 141,120 flies weigh two pounds twelve ounces, it's easy to calculate what one will weigh.—Chicago News.

EARLY DAYS IN DAKOTA.

The Kind of Outfit Needed to Run a Newspaper in Deadwood.

It was along in the '70s some time, soon after the late Barney Caulfield left Chicago and settled at Deadwood, that he purchased a newspaper outfit for the latter place. It happened like this: A young man named Blakely, who had picked through the shell and been successfully hatched from an Eastern college a year or two before, came out to Deadwood, then the roughest mining camp in the country. He was somewhat acquainted with Caulfield, his father being an old friend of Barney. When young Blakely had escaped from the college, dragging his diploma behind him, he had, in his own words, "embraced the profession of journalism." He looked around Deadwood a little and decided he saw a great opening for a newspaper, notwithstanding there were already five dailies in the field. Fearing another man was going to get ahead of him in the enterprise, he wished to instruct a friend in Chicago who was a printer to select an outfit for him, but had forgotten his address. Caulfield was in Chicago on a short business trip, so he wrote him to this effect: "Have decided to put in a red-hot independent paper here and rip the jack-leg lawyers and guerrilla politicians both ways. Please see Clifford for me and tell him to go ahead and select a seven-column outfit about as I told him before I came out. Will come on myself in a few days."

A week later he arrived in Chicago and immediately hunted up Barney, finding him in the office of a friend.

"Did you get my letter?" he anxiously inquired.

"Yes."

"Did you see Clifford?"

"No, not yet."

"Ah, couldn't find him?"

"Well, the fact is I haven't looked. I suppose I caught your idea, did I not—your intention is to start a red-hot paper in Deadwood and go right in and make it personal and interesting?"

"Yes, that's it."

"If you find the mayor doesn't deal a straight game of faro at his place you'll give him Hail Columbia, eh?"

"I shall anyhow—the keeper of a gambling-house is not a fit man for mayor."

"Yes, I took it that was the style of paper you were going to run. I selected an outfit for you myself."

"You? I didn't know you knew anything about the printing business."

"I don't know any thing about the printing business, but I know a pile about Deadwood," replied Barney, as he got up and went into another room. A moment later he returned with a double-barreled shot-gun and two big revolvers and carefully laid them on the desk.

"There, young man," said Barney, "there is the outfit you need to run that kind of a paper in Deadwood! You'll find they're the best made and all greased up good and heavily loaded. Go out somewhere and practice with 'em! Of course you may require a little type and may be a press, but any body can pick them out for you; you'll find the shot-gun and the two hip cannon will be the biggest part of your necessary plant, and you want to get so you can shoot 'em straight without stopping to aim!"

The young journalist never went back to Deadwood, and has since embraced the profession of clerk in a dry-goods store.—F. H. Carruth, in Chicago Tribune.

ABOUT GUM-CHEWING.

Bill Nye Discourses for the Benefit of a Girl in Search of Knowledge.

One who signs herself "A Vassar Girl" writes to know if the habit of gum-chewing is really injurious, and also if it can truthfully be considered de trop.

The letter, though carefully and ingeniously written, is scarcely the work of a Vassar girl. A Vassar girl, with the educational advantages of that institution, and knowing, as she must, that man is a cudless animal, would hardly address such a question to the undersigned. This young woman must be playing upon the credulity of one who is easily made the dupe of those who write tender words with Gothic penmanship and seductive odors. A Vassar girl would not need to ask whether it would be injurious or not for a person not having four stomachs to try and emulate the cud-bearing or endogenous mammalia. She would know it at once.

It is not done because gum chewing is injurious that I would speak against it. It is unnice. None of us are using gum this winter in our set. It interferes with a clear, nasal enunciation; and when one goes to bed with gum in the mouth it is too apt to be stuck on the headboard of the bed, where, as it becomes more and more frequent, it mars the symmetry of the furniture and takes off the varnish. Moreover, you seem to accomplish so little in chewing gum; Chew, dear one, as long as you may, but a wad of spruce has gum to stay. Man gets weary at set of sun, but you can not fatigue a cud of gum.

If I can do any thing further in the way of advice or album poetry I am a chewer service.—Bill Nye, in N. Y. World.

BIG AVALANCHES.

A Colorado Gentleman Describes the Dangers of Snow-Slips.

George W. Seaver, of Aspen, Col., in conversation with a reporter, said: "Just before I left home we had the first of our winter pests. I refer to snow slides. In Colorado there are two distinct kinds of snow-slips—the snow slide and the avalanche. The snow slide occurs when a dry fall of snow has covered the steep sides of the mountains and passes. The snow under these conditions literally slides until it strikes a lower or more level space. Such a disturbance is inconvenient, as it blocks wagon and rail roads, but is seldom attended with disastrous consequences, as the snow is so light and soft that it divides on encountering any obstacle, such as a house, without carrying it away. Its motion, also, is so gradual, that a man in its track can easily find means of getting out of the way, and even if he were caught could escape without injury.

"The avalanche, on the other hand," Mr. Seaver went on to say, "is far more dangerous. For the formation of an avalanche snow more or less moist is necessary, and also a hard-frozen base upon which the snow rests. A heavy fall succeeding a cold snap is nearly certain to occasion avalanches, and these are most disastrous. Instead of slipping slowly and easily along in a soft, porous mass, the snow balls and rushes down the mountain side with irresistible force and at a terrific speed. Trees and rocks are torn up and incorporated in the rushing mass, and whatever comes in its way has to yield. Unlike the snow-slide, the avalanche when once it has gathered headway is not stopped by any level space of ordinary extent, but rushes across a plain several hundred yards in width and plunges down the mountain side beyond. When an avalanche occurs in the neighborhood of a pass the snow usually fills it up to a depth of from forty to fifty feet, and is not cleared out until spring, unless a very large force of men is put to work to make a pathway. It is no uncommon thing for a mining camp to be cut off from communication with the outside world for weeks at a time by one of these avalanches, and the suffering from want of food and fuel is often extreme. The only way to establish communication is by a line of couriers on snow-shoes, and these men are in constant danger of their lives, as in passing along the track of an avalanche the least noise or motion is likely to start another, and dozens of lives are thus lost every year. The short, broad Canadian snow-shoe is never used by the couriers, as this pattern is only good on level ground. All mail-carriers and couriers are equipped with the Norwegian snow-shoe, a strip of wood about eight feet long and two inches wide. This gives a firm support on the lightest snow, and is splendid for coasting. I have seen snow-shoe men come down a slope at the rate of nearly a mile a minute, and run fully a hundred yards on the level before losing their impetus. I am convinced that the best and most daring snow-shoe men in the world are found among the mining camps of the Rocky Mountains, but in spite of their skill scores of them are lost every year—frozen to death or overwhelmed by avalanches—and it is a wonder to me how so many men are willing to volunteer for the most hazardous duty of crossing the avalanche-covered passes in winter."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Iron for Fruit Trees.

An exchange furnishes an account of the successful experiment of one of its correspondents who buried old iron about the roots of his trees, which resulted in a great improvement in their growth, and in a greatly increased crop of fruit. We have no doubt of the correctness of the statement. It reminds us of an experiment with similar result, made many years ago, when the theory was extensively advocated that electricity aided vegetable growth, and the grapevine planted at the foot of the recently erected lightning-rod made twice the growth of the vines remote from it; and the rows of beans planted over the buried wire with upward points at the ends, grew more vigorous than beans elsewhere. It was found that the increased growth of the vine was entirely the result of the deep bed of mellow earth made in setting the foot of the rod deep into the soil, and the beans enjoyed the benefit of a similar treatment by the mellow trench for the wire. The pieces of old iron, refuse stove-pipes, worn horse-shoes, cast-off iron kettles, etc., could not be buried under the trees without digging the soil deeply and thoroughly, to the great benefit of the roots. Otherwise the iron could be of no benefit.—Country Gentleman.

—What a sad world this would be to a thoughtful man if there were nothing beyond this world! Not for himself, perhaps, but for others, there is need of another life to make this life tolerable to one who observes and reflects. On every side there are deserving ones who suffer far more than the undeserving. And there are saints whose lives are lives of toil and trial and seeming failure. Here, often, if not always, the fittest die and the unfittest survive. If there were nothing to live for beyond the life that now is, the helps to true character-making would cost more than their apparent worth. —Sunday-School Times.

ABOUT BAROMETERS.

The Principles Involved in the Changes Which the Mercury Undergoes.

The fundamental principle of the construction of the barometer is best shown in the experiment which led Torricelli to the first discovery of the presence of the air. A glass tube about thirty-three inches long, opened at one end, is completely filled with mercury, and, being firmly closed by the thumb, is inverted and placed vertically in a cup containing mercury. When the thumb is removed the mercury sinks in the tube till it stands, generally, about thirty inches above the level of the mercury in the cup, leaving in the upper part a space free of air which receives the name of the Torricellian vacuum. The mercury within the tube being less removed from the pressure of the air, while that in the cup is exposed to it, the column falls till the pressure at the section of the hole, in the same plane as the surface of the mercury in the cup, is the same within and without the tube. We have yet no better index of the pressure of the atmosphere than the simple mercurial column of Torricelli, and in all exact observations it is taken as the only reliable standard. Simple as the barometer is, its construction demands considerable care and experience. It is of the first importance that the mercury to be used is chemically pure, otherwise its fluidity is impaired and the inside of the tube becomes coated with impurities in such a way as to render correct observations impossible. Mercury, as usually sold, is not pure; and before being employed for barometers, must be shaken well with highly diluted but pure nitric acid, to remove extraneous metals and oxides. In filling the tube it is essentially necessary to get the column free from air and moisture. To effect this, the mercury, after filling, is boiled in the tube, so that air and moisture may be expelled. Barometers are usually divided into two classes—cistern barometer and siphon barometer. The siphon barometer is in many respects a more perfect instrument than the cistern. The wheel barometer, originally invented by Hook, and generally seen as a parlor ornament, has little to recommend it as a trustworthy instrument. The uses of the barometer may be classified into physical, hypsometrical and meteorological. It is of essential use in all physical researches where the mechanical, optical, acoustical and chemical properties of air or other gases are dependent on the pressure of the atmosphere. Its uses in hypsometry, or the art of measuring the heights of mountains, is very valuable, but the best known use of the barometer is as a meterological instrument, or as a weather glass. Opticians have attached to certain heights of the barometer certain states of the weather, and at certain points of the scale the words "Rain," "Changeable," "Fair," etc., are marked; but the connection thus instituted is very misleading. Those who have observed most carefully the connection of barometric heights with changes of the weather, disregard entirely the use of these terms, and state that it is not the actual height of the barometer at any place, but this height as compared with that of surrounding regions, which indicates the coming weather. Generally speaking, a falling barometer indicates rain, a rising barometer fair weather. A steady barometer foretels a continuance of the weather at the time; when low this is generally broken or bad, and when high, fair. A sudden fall usually preceeds a storm, the violence of which is in proportion to the barometric gradient. An unsteady barometer shows an unsettled state of the weather; gradual changes, the approach of some permanent condition of it. The variations must also be interpreted with reference to the prevailing winds, each different wind having some peculiar rules. The connection between the changes of weather and the pressure of the atmosphere is by no means well understood.—Toledo Blade.

BROKEN ENGAGEMENTS.

The Nonchalance Displayed Nowadays in Affairs of the Heart.

It is often somewhat shocking to people of middle age, or past that period, to observe the nonchalance with which far too many of the young ladies of the present day speak of their engagements of marriage, that is, with no shrinking, or hesitation, or reserve, and, as it would appear to the observer, with no delicacy. And not only is it the want of delicacy that strikes one, but a want of respect toward the engagement, a treatment of it as if it were the lightest of affairs, without especial significance unless one pleased, an arrangement for lunch, a rendezvous at a reception, not nearly so serious, indeed, as a dinner engagement, which is something that must be kept, but a part of the frivolities of life, not to be looked at intently or spoken of gravely, but entered into half in prank and frolic, continued as long as agreeable, and broken as lightly as a bubble a child blows from a pipe.

The manner, too, in which these engagements are formed is a source of surprise and shock, again, to the reputable middle-aged woman, who is convinced that things were not done so in her young days—the total levity and want of sentiment, the young man's purse and general ability to provide a fine menage and equipage having more to do with the solidarity of the enterprise than virtue or personal charm; genial manners, good dancing and pleasant temper being enough for the temporary arrangement, and the temporary arrangement being tolerably well understood to be only for the season, terminate, like various other copartner-ships at the will of either party.

But equally is it a matter or pain and trouble to the astonished observer to notice the manner in which the engagements are broken, letters returned, all but a tell-tale few, some gifts returned and some retained; a little romance, a little sentiment, as if just for the play's sake, a few tears, under which the laugh comes sparkling presently, and the way is clear for the next aspirant. And then the affair is spoken of as cooly and openly as any event of yesterday's dinner or of last night's ball—such and such a thing happened when this young person was engaged to So-and-so, or no, was it then, or when she and young This-and-that were so epris with each other? The whole affair of the engagement is a glove that has been dropped, a flower that has faded, a story that is told. In this good, middle-aged lady's day, when a young lady broke her engagement, or had it broken for her, she went into retirement for a season like a young widow, and did not brazen it out as if she had done no more than promise to go to a picnic and had then thought better of it.

There seems to the quiet if critical onlooker a single profanity about the business, and she feels this the most in remarking the careless way in which the engagement is formed, as if one rushed into the Holy of Holies, and without removing the shoes from one's feet. Better an affinity of times, she confesses, are all the broken engagements in the world beforehand than broken marriage and divorce afterward. But in her code of morals there should be neither. The very idea of marriage should be approached with as much reverence as an altar. In some parts of the country she knows the affair is so modestly conducted that an engagement is never spoken of till preparations are making for the wedding. While this is beyond the censor's strictest idea, she would yet have a little of the church-going feeling about the maiden's heart in accepting her lover, and she would have the affair taken so seriously that no lover would be received as such just for the convenience of the season's pleasure and attendance, just to lift the reproach from vanity, or because So-and-so had a lover, but received only when he had come to stay, and where he was so worthy that the intention was to keep him.—Harper's Bazar.

Unlucky Wedding Days.

According to an ancient and reliable chronicle, there are thirty-two days in the year that are especially unlucky for marriages and journeys. They are as follows: January 1, 2, 4, 5, 7, 10 and 15; February 6, 7 and 18; March 1, 6 and 8; April 6 and 11; May 5, 6 and 7; June 7 and 15; July 5 and 17; August 15 and 19; September 6 and 7; October 7; November 15 and 16, and December 15, 16 and 17. Every body knows that Friday is the most unlucky day for a wedding, while Wednesday and Thursday are the luckiest. Our grandmothers believed that it was a most unfortunate thing if the bride, after finishing her toilet and leaving her looking-glass, should turn around again for a last glance at herself. It was also bad for her to see the man she was about to marry, after dressing, and before the time had come for the ceremony.—Chicago Journal.

Almost, But Not Quite.

"Where have you been for the past two weeks?" said one traveling man to another; "out on the road?"

"No, I took a run to New Orleans to see a young lady down there."

"Did you have a pleasant time?"

"No, not as pleasant as I expected. Her father doesn't hold me in the high esteem with which I could honor him."

"Then you were not wined and dined and feted?"

"No, I wasn't exactly feeted, but I was booted on several occasions."—Merchant Traveler.

AMERICAN WEAPONS.

How Our Government Has Discouraged Inventors of Rifles and Guns.

A few days ago I was talking with an old gun merchant in New York. He commenced as an ironmaker not far from the seat of war, and when the commotion broke out he had on his hands certain tools and furnaces and ore-beds.

Our old ironmaker now turned into an arms manufacturer, and he had a large market as long as the Americans were killing each other on the hair-splitting points of the forefathers. We acquired during the war much of our superiority as inventors and makers of arms, and have since supplied the world with weapons.

I am told that Ames in Massachusetts makes better sabers and swords than they do at Soligen, Germany, where they have been making them for centuries. The Turkish army is supplied with Winchester rifles, the Russian army with Berdan rifles, the Spanish army and the South American Republics with Remington rifles, and the Italians with the Gardiner machine-guns, and Stanley's expedition to Africa, with the Maxim machine-guns, etc. But our old friend thus discoursed concerning the American Government:

"This is the most bureaucratic Government in the world. You can not get any invention adopted by it because of the backwardness of its ordnance officers. There was Hotchkiss, who went to Washington with his inventions, and he was put off and disappointed until he started for France with hardly more than the clothes to his back. In France he has made millions of money and left behind him a great corporation. It was the same way with Spencer when he invented the magazine rifle, which carried its cartridges in the stock. He was rejected everywhere, and was leaving the War Department one day broken-hearted, when a messenger said to him: 'I can take you to a man who will look at your gun, as these army fellows will not.' So he took him to Abraham Lincoln, whom the messenger knew from having been with him almost daily. Lincoln had on a queer old office suit, which he apologized for as he took Spencer's hand and went out somewhere near by, and, taking up the gun, fired at a shingle, and made several excellent shots, and put all the balls on the shingle, for he had been a rifleman in his youth. The inventor then took his own gun and put all the balls within a circle on a shingle. This shingle is preserved in the Illinois Historic Society, which has never acknowledged the gift by any letter, though they announce it among their trophies.

"Lincoln told Spencer to go on and make all the guns he could, as that arm was needed, and hence magazine rifles for the first time came into use. Now the Government ordnance officers are using the Springfield rifle, which is a very inferior weapon. They are doing it on the plea of economy, since they possess certain arms to be altered and certain machinery to be run. Look here at this Springfield rifle. When you put the cartridge in and bring down the piece which holds it forward you risk a premature discharge every time and an explosion, because this lock part does not admit moisture anywhere and gives no chance for the expansion of the gases when the powder is blown off. But they have used this defect in the gun to destroy almost every other gun presented at Washington. They have invented the rust test. Their gun can not rust from this dangerous matter spoken of. Better guns, when they are dipped in powerful chemicals and put out in sea water all night, will show a little of the moisture. Hence the rust test has driven all American arms abroad, to be put in the hands of foreigners."—Gath, in Cincinnati Enquirer.

An Interesting Discovery.

Some wonderful teeth, weighing five pounds each and measuring nineteen inches in circumference, were plowed up lately by William Fisher, of Clachan, in a low field on his farm. Several years ago this field was drained of a body of water by which it had been covered, and later on a heavy fire overspread it, lowering the surface a few feet. By investigation the teeth and their fossil accompaniments (huge bones five feet long) evidently belong to a species now extinct, and classed by S. G. Gooderich as "dinotherium," which he describes as an herbiverous quadruped twenty feet in length, and holding an intermediate position between the mastodon and the tapir. The fine enameled surface of these gigantic teeth and their forked prongs, which must have protruded fully eight inches into the monster's jaw, is an object of great curiosity. Other discoveries of a similar nature have of late years been made in that vicinity, but this of Mr. Fisher's is the most recent and most interesting.—London (Can.) Advertiser.

Not the Ambulance.

Two hundred pounds of solid flesh, encased in dress, bonnet, shoes and other articles too numerous to mention, came down with a crash near the Soldiers' Monument yesterday afternoon, and a woman yelled "O-o-oh!" loud enough to be heard two blocks away. A pedestrian turned aside and extended his hand and anxiously inquired:

"Shall I ring for the ambulance, ma'am?"

"No, sir!" she snapped, as she started to pick herself up. "If you want to oblige me wring the necks of some of these people who are grinning as if I had never tried it before, and hadn't got it down to a fine kerbump!" —Detroit Free Press.

FAST OF RAMADAN.

THE LONG MONTH OF AGONY FOR HUNGRY TURKS.

Devices of Wealthy Mussulmen to Escape the Discomforts of Their Religion. The Beggars Disposed Of—In the Great Mosque of St. Sophia.

Ramadan—that terrible month of daily fasting and nightly feasting—is, like the Chinese new year, governed by the moon. This year, precisely at the moment the new moon became visible, the evening of May 25, Ramadan began and continued throughout the lunar month. The origin of this long fast seems shrouded in mystery, as it is said to have been observed by the fire worshipers long before the time of Mahomet Ali, who thought the command to all true believers to fast thus eleven months in the year was quite too much to require of mortal flesh; through the Angel Gabriel he therefore besought the great spirit to reduce the time one-half. Finding this still a heavy trial, he again interceded and got the time fixed at one lunar month, where it still remains, and no doubt thousands of Mohammedans ardently wish the time much more reduced.

By the more intelligent class it is less religiously observed each passing year, but to the pious peasantry it still means real penance, as they faithfully abstain from food, drink and even from the use of tobacco, during the entire day. Even the "Hamals" (who are the real beasts of burden here) are so conscientious about keeping this fast, that, with every nerve quivering with fatigue, and in torment with hunger, they will stand with a tempting morsel in hand watching the declining sun, patiently waiting until the sunset gong is heard, then devour it in beast like haste. In homes of affluence the devoutly inclined sit at their tables, with fork or spoon in hand, waiting also for the welcome boom of cannon before they can begin their nightly feasting. As a rule, they turn night into day and vice versa. Still it is supposed some sleep is indulged in, as precisely at 12 o'clock a patrol passes through each street with a large drum, bent upon awakening all sleepers to a midnight feast, which may be prolonged until the morning twilight. Then the mouth must be carefully cleansed and the fast resumed.

It is now said that but few of the aristocracy of Turkey pay any heed to this fast, still they dare not publicly disregard it. The sultan is credited with setting an example of strict observance. If he does so literally, he must neither eat, drink nor smoke during the long summer day. Even to indulge in a delightful and refreshing perfume is sin.

This month of fasting is supposed to be a "revival season" to the Moslems, in which they are to devote much time to the study of the Koran. Hospitality, almsgiving, prayer and peacefulness are to be especially cultivated. You hear of the rich man standing at his door at sunset to salute and invite to his table the poor who happen to pass by, sending them on their way rejoicing in presents of money, but you see little of this today. On the contrary, you may observe "the powers that be" take great pains to rid the city of its swarms of beggars. Before Ramadan begins the edict goes forth that all found asking alms in public thoroughfares shall be arrested. Those from the provinces are to be sent to their homes; those who are found to have neither homes nor friends are to be set to work, if able. Thus they who are inclined to keep this fast in a literal manner are relieved of a heavy draft upon their purse strings. An "Iftar" or Ramadan dinner is ceremonious and absorbs much time. As soon as the sun approaches the western horizon a large circular tray is brought in covered with a variety of sweetmeats, salads, salt fish, Ramadan cakes, fruits and olives, together with delicious sherbet. When the sunset gun is fired every one takes an olive, that fruit being the most blessed, with which to break the fast. After partaking of these appetizers dinner is brought in, which consists of eight or ten courses, each tasted sparingly. Then dainty cups of coffee and cigarettes follow. After this the faithful are supposed to repair to mosques for devotion.

Minarets as well as mosques are all brilliantly lighted and throngs of worshipers fill the spacious buildings. The streets, too, are bright as day and as gay as a carnival season, especially those of Stamboul, which is, per se, the Turkish quarter of the capital. Here you not only find the mosques and bazars illuminated, but the fruit and refreshment shops as well, for eating, drinking sherbet and smoking are the order of the evening, together with no small amount of flirtations, for now the Turkish beauty is granted unusual liberty. Very few, however, are seen among the pedestrians, but hundreds of fine carriages are found cutting their way though the dense throng filled with veiled ladies who go abroad to see and be seen—not to worship, for they are excluded from the mosque at this season. The Turks excuse this injustice by saying they would divert their thoughts from holy contemplation, as their beauty inspires a different kind of worship.

The last Friday of Ramadan is the most sacred of all the Moslem Sabbaths. It is then that the great Mosque of St. Sophia is most crowded with true believers, and the Giaour (Christian) is carefully excluded. A liberal "bachshees," however, secured for our party an entrance through a back door and along a dimly lighted tunnel, built in the massive outer wall, to a lofty gallery, from which the thousands of worshipers on the floor beneath the great dome looked like pigmies, and their voices, as they chanted in unison verses from the Koran, came up to us like the roar of old ocean in a storm. But more impressive still was the perfect harmony of motion—when some 5,000 prostrate worshipers rose to their feet, then bowed again to the dust, the effect was truly electrifying.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Philadelphia's Lily Ponds.

The most unique and beautiful collection of water lilies in this country is the boast of Fairmount park in Philadelphia. In the great lily ponds every variety, from the pink blossom of New York to the imposing Victoria Regina, an island in its broad expanse of leaf, is to be found. Through blue, purple, red and snow white lilies the gold and silver fish dart, and in summer butterflies of brilliant hue hover over the pond flowers in delight. A new variety of the lily family is to be added to the collection. It is produced by a French gardener, Latour Marliac. The flowers are six inches in diameter, and their color is the soft canary of the Marechal Niel rose. Only two other yellow water lilies are known—a pretty North American species and a dull colored species of Brazil. New York Press.

The largest cow in Dakota is reported from Cass county. She stands 6 feet high at the shoulders, and, though thin in flesh, weighs 1,800 pounds.

The weatherwise of Maine say that the recent capture of an immense Arctic owl near Fish Point presages an early winter. The bird measured 6 feet from tip to tip.

A handsome buck was recently shot near Rock Springs, Ky., which for the past ten years had been a target for the rifles of the hunters of the neighborhood. He weighed 175 pounds and his antlers were of unusual size.

In many portions of Idaho, Nevada and Wyoming the rabbits are so numerous that they are becoming almost as great a plague as in Australia. The proprietors of a large ranch are giving boys five cents apiece for killing them, and some of the boys earn as much as $5 each per day. The dead rabbits are fed to hogs to fatten them.

Levi Campbell, of Kingsbury, Me., set a bear trap and a bear got into it. He dragged the trap a good distance, until it was caught in a log. Then Levi came up and struck the bear with an axe. The animal turned suddenly, wrenched the trap loose, grabbed Levi, and was in a fair way to make an end of him when his dog pitched in and attracted the bear's attention until Levi could drag himself away.

Justice Jaunasch, of Kalamazoo, Mich., has a parrot that he wouldn't sell for its weight in silver. On five different occasions has this intelligent bird saved the house from being burglarized. The last time was on a recent night. The burglar got the door unfastened, but when he opened it the parrot asked, in a stern and harsh voice: "Hello, there! What's the matter?" The burglar didn't answer, but fell over himself in his desperate effort to get away.

BRIGHT SAYINGS OF CHILDREN.

Boston Mamma—You mustn't speak of your legs, Flossie, when we have company. It isn't polite. Flossie—What should I say, mamma, drumsticks?"—New York Sun.

Father—Come, Bobby, you are all tired out; so hurry off to bed. Bobby, with a slow and reluctant movement)—Pa, you oughtn't to tell a boy to hurry up when he's all tired out.—Philadelphia North American.

When little Meg saw a picture of Christian, with the burden on his back, she looked at it curiously for a minute and then asked: "Mamma, what makes the manny wear his bustle so high up on his back."—Boston Transcript.

A tiny nephew once heard his dearly beloved maiden aunt called an "old maid." The child's elder brothers and sisters were telling "what they were going to be" one day soon afterward, and little precocity astonished everybody in the room by saying earnestly that he was going to be an "old maid like auntie, 'cause she made everybody dood."—Kingston Freeman.

A sturdy little chap, some 7 years old, had a tantrum one day last week, and his mother, in order to mark her displeasure and impress it upon him, left him by himself and went to her own room. He followed her as far as the door, and, after she had passed in, closed it somewhat emphatically. Then he went to his play. Half an hour later he returned, opened the door softly and looked in. His mother caught his eye and could not repress a smile. "There," he said, "I knew you'd get over it. Now you are my own dear mamma again."—Boston Herald.

Little Nellie, of West End, was in an avenue store yesterday with her mother, and she was greatly pleased with the Christmas array of dolls. "Mamma," she said, "I want a baby." "Very well, Nellie," replied the mother, "you shall have one," and Nellie soon had one in her arms, but she was not satisfied and still hung about the doll display. Finally, half in fear and half in hope, she whispered: "Mamma, I'd like to have twins."—Washington Critic.

SPORTING AND ATHLETIC.

E. C. Carter, the famous runner, announces that he will start only in scratch events and championship runs during 1888.

Should Gaudaur again take up the sculls next season he will train from the Bradford Boat club, where his boats are now stored.

California will probably send two athletic teams to New York next September to compete for the United States amateur championship.

The Amateur Athletic association of England is considering whether or not to prohibit the method of high jumping by "diving" over the bar.

Teemer, now that he has become a resident of Boston, is expected to boom sculling in that vicinity. His headquarters next season will be at the Riverside Boat club, Charles river.

William E. Harding writes from London that Pat Sheedy at first refused to shake hands with him, but when he saw him (Harding) being lionized "he came over and done it."

J. B. Buchanan, 20 years old, now has the record for throwing the fifty-six pound weight in Australia. He won a competition at the Petersham demonstration sports, sending the iron a distance of twenty-four feet nine inches, and winning by three feet five inches.

It is stated that when Henry Irving plays "Don Quixote," John L. Toole will appear as "Sancho Panza." It is also understood that Mr. Irving will by and by effect a revival of Shakespeare's "Richard II."

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

Salt dissolved in alcohol will remove grease spots from cloth.

Rub the tea kettle with kerosene and polish with a dry flannel cloth.

Camp chairs are now covered with plush and bordered with tiny tassels of silk.

Flour should be kept in a barrel, with a flour scoop to dip it and a sieve to sift it.

Ceilings that have been smoked by a kerosene lamp should be washed off with soda water.

The surest test of a frozen orange is its weight. If it is heavy in the hand it has not been frozen.

Cold sliced potatoes fry and taste better by sprinkling a teaspoonful of flour over them while frying.

Drain pipes and all places that are sour or impure may be cleansed with lime water or carbolic acid.

Bent whalebones can be restored and used again by simply soaking in water a few hours, then drying them.

For a cold on the chest, a flannel rag wrung out in boiling water and sprinkled with turpentine, laid on the chest, gives the greatest relief.

When a felon first begins to make its appearance, take a lemon, cut off one end, put the finger in, and the longer it is kept there the better.

When the rubber rollers of your wringer become sticky, as they very often do after wringing flannel, rub with kerosene and wipe dry and they will be nice and smooth.

For a cough, boil one ounce of flax seed in a pint of water, strain and add a little honey, one ounce of rock candy and the juice of three lemons; mix and boil well. Drink as hot as possible.

To clean carpets, go over them once a week with a broom dipped in hot water, to which a little turpentine has been added. Wring a cloth in the hot water and wipe under pieces of furniture to be moved.

To test cake in the oven, never insert a broom splinter, but draw it gently forward and put the ear close to the loaf; if it is not done there will be a little sputtering sound. When it is thoroughly baked there will be no sound.

GASTRONOMICAL TIDBITS.

A very palatable imitation of mock turtle soup is made out of the ordinary black bean.

Epicures rise in meeting and declare the only way to enjoy reed birds is stewed in cream.

It is late in the day for an exchange to dwell upon the difference between smelts and frost fish.

Just why so many French cooks destroy tomato soup by a flavor of ham has yet to be explained.

Alarmists are spreading the usual tales of probable extinction of canvas back ducks and terrapin.

Foolish men continue to get into disputes as to the alleged superiority of different kinds of oysters.

Philadelphians long ago ceased to deny the allegation that they eat sparrows "as a regular thing" for game.

Only the brave deserve the fair, and only home made mince pies are ever made as the gastronomic law directs.

The government has put a duty on imported plum pudding, and there is a great howl from the Anglomaniacs.

The fashionable buckwheat cake is about the size of a trade dollar, and, to be facetious, contains more of the wheat than the buck.

Thousands of people at this season are not happy at a dinner at which there is turkey unless they get the delicacy of the bird, which is a wing.

Between some hotels' cranberry sauce and ordinary red ink there is very little difference, and anti slang critics may well say to the waiter: "What are you giving us?"

A Washington correspondent would have us believe pumpkin is the almost invariable dessert at the season at a White House dinner. This, if true, would indicate the "eternal fitness of things," at least in one direction.

CURIOUS THINGS OF LIFE.

A Russian miser learned to bark in order to avoid the expense of keeping a watch dog.

An Atchison (Kan.) man recently acted as pall bearer at a funeral and usher at a wedding the same day.

James Judge, of Kenosha, Wis., although totally blind, is one of the most skillful plumbers in the town.

Mrs. Crobar is a powerful lever in a Saginaw, Mich., church society, where the Rev. Mr. Broadax hews a branch from the tree of evil every Sunday.

Charles Miller attempted a masquerade at Columbus dressed in a convict's striped suit. A policeman arrested him on suspicion, locked him up, and he was refused bail.

A citizen of Freemont, Neb., who got drunk and froze his feet so that they had to be amputated, has just recovered $2,000 damages from the man who sold him the liquor.

Floyd Tufts, of Westmore, Vt., is but 7 years old, and weighs only 115 pounds, but he is able to shoulder two bushels of corn with ease and to lift his grandfather, who weighs 175 pounds, from the floor without exerting himself.

In order to try the extent to which a tragic actress is moved by the whirl of stage passion, Sarah Bernhardt's pulse was once tested at the wings immediately after a scene of great intensity. It ticked as regularly and normally as an eight day clock.

DAUGHTERS OF EVE.

Amelia B. Edwards, the novelist, writes "Ph. D." and "LL. D." after her name.

The queen of Roumania has written a Christmas story for one of the newspapers published in her capital.

Elizabeth Stuart Phelps is suffering from an affection of the eyes and is obliged to do her literary work by the aid of an amanuensis. She is living quietly at Andover, Mass.

The queen regent of Spain is gaining a great hold on the affection of her subjects, and is said to be a wonderful woman, charming in manner and possessing great administrative ability.

There is a lady in Jackson, Miss., so deeply affected by the loss of her husband, whose death occurred recently, that every day she writes him a long letter, and, with her own hands, places it on his grave.

This remark upon Jenny Lind appears in an English paper: "If ever an angel leaning over the crystal battlements happened to let a voice slip out of its possession it fell upon the cradle of Jenny Lind."

Lady Burdett-Coutts denies that she has any intention of visiting America, and adds that she is afraid that a journey to this country would probably be made unpleasant by newspaper comments. At a recent wedding the venerable old lady wore a cloak entirely composed of

The Brotherhood of Man.

The educated man or woman of the gentler class, however kindly disposed, too often speaks to servants, to the poor, or the criminal, as from a higher plane than they occupy, with an affable patronage which the hearer resents. He never forgets that the rich and poor are of one blood, or doubt that circumstances have made all the difference between them.

That mysterious race, the Romany, have certain signs and words by which they recognize each other in every nation or condition of life. From one of their own blood only will they accept support or alliance. There is something of the Gitana in all human beings. Only the man who owns himself to be our brother can always help us or lift us.—Youth's Companion.

TAKE SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

For all Diseases of the Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Spleen.

This purely vegetable preparation, now so celebrated as a Family Medicine, originated in the South in 1828. It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons' Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. L. M. HINTON, M. D., Washington, Ark.

Stockton flour at Rhine's.

Mr. R. E. Barnes, of Cottonwood, was in town last Wednesday.

Several Republicans propose to organize a campaign club at Independence.

Mr. J. Cole, of Little Lake, was up here last Thursday, on business at the Land Office.

Mr. Baxter, Mr. Kispert and other fruit growers in the neighborhood of Independence, say that so far the prospect for a good fruit crop is excellent.

Last Monday several thousand young apple trees were delivered at Tibbetts station for Mr. B. F. Leete. The trees were grown at Reno and will be planted at Black Rock.

Horace Bellows passed through town last Tuesday with two hundred head of muttons. The animals were from his flock at Haiwei Meadows and were for the Bishop Creek market.

Mr. N. Rhine reports from San Francisco that the suit of Frank Silva for recovery of seven thousand dollars deposited with Wells Fargo & Co. has been decided in his favor.

Mr. W. R. Tibbets has bought the place formerly owned by S. G. Greeg at Big Pine. Mr. Tibbets took posession last Monday. The place contains 160 acres; it is good land.

Last Saturday evening fire broke out at the residence of Rev. Andrew Clark, at Bishop Creek. Help was promptly given and the fire was extinguished before doing much damage.

The death of Chief Justice Waite has made an opening for the appointment of a democrat to the office. The last democratic Chief Justice was Taney, author of the terrible Dred Scott decision.

Last Monday eight fine horses were delivered at Independenca station for work on the east side canal. The animals were shipped from Carson, Nevada; they are all large, two of them weigh 3250 pounds.

The Independence Brass Band intend going to Lone Pine for a May Day pic-nic if satisfactory arrangements can be made. Further particulars in regard to the matter will be published as they are made known.

Mr. D. Pitman and Mrs. Hannah Olinghouse were married at Hawthorne, Nevada, on Tuesday of last week. Mr. Pitman is an employe on the C. & C. railroad; his wife is a sister to Supervisor Eldred of Bishop Creek.

Governor Alger, of Michigan, will it is said, build a saw mill at San Francisco at an outlay of a quarter of a million of dollars. He owns an extensive tract of timber in Humboldt county and the logs are to be floated from there by sea to the mill.

Mr. O'Neil, of Paradise valley, Nevada; was at Independence last Wednesday. He returned to Bishop Creek on Thursday. He proposes to build water works for the town of Bishop Creek. There is a good opening at that place for water works and the town would be greatly benefitted.

Last Tuesday Mrs. Doctor Woodin was summoned by telegraph to go to Darwin to attend Mrs. Lee, who was very ill. The doctor at once started and drove the fifty-six miles in a little over nine hours. Mrs. Woodin returned home Tuesday, having left her patient in good condition.

Last Saturday evening L. A. James, of Bishop Creek, while laboring under temporary aberation of mind inflicted a wound upon himself with a knife. The point of the knife struck a rib without doing any serious injury. Friends took charge of Mr. James and cared for him till he was able to take care of himself.

For many years past the unenclosed land in the valley has not been so thickly covered with wild flowers as at present. Great tracts are now gleaming in purple and gold; the flowers in many places are so thick as to cover the ground like a carpet; but in such brilliant and rich colors as no carpet made by human hands could rival.

The movement recently started at Lone Pine to raise funds for buying machinery and boring wells progresses very favorably. An amount has already been secured that would seem to insure the success of the project. The finding of one good flowing well there would at once insure rapid prosperity for the town and neighborhood.

Last Wednesday while at work painting in a new building in town, R. Whittaker got hurt by the falling of a scaffold. Dick was a gastly looking object when he fell; the palor occasioned by the fall was intensified by the contents of a pot of white paint that was spread all over his head and face three coats thick. He is able to be around again.

For the first time in four years the Mojave river is reported to be so high that it is not fordable at any point above or nearer than seven or eight miles below Daggett. At the old crossing place the water is five to seven feet deep, runs very rapidly and at several points threatens to overflow. A few months hence there will be nothing of the river but a streak of dry sand.

The cattle men of Mono county are moving for a repeal of the ordinance imposing a tax on the business of raising cattle. The cattle men are taxed on their land and on their cattle. To impose another tax on the business of raising cattle is double taxation; manifestly unjust, because other property is not so taxed, and discrimination against a particular business that everybody is interested in.

Mr. Henry Melone visited Lookout on his way back from Death valley. He says Frank Fitzgerald has a very fine body of ore in sight and a large quantity already on the dump. Mr. Melone went into the mine and saw a ledge of solid ore about two feet thick; it extends upward and downward from the drift where now opened, and appears to be getting larger as the drift advances. Mr. Melone firmly believes this will turn out to be a very valuable ore body.

It is reported from Los Angeles that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, has ruled that a body of 450,000 acres of land in Los Angeles and San Bernardino counties, heretofore selected and claimed by the Southern Pacific Company, shall be thrown open to entry under the general land laws of the United States, being lands covered by the lately forfeited grant to the Atlantic and Pacific. The ground of the ruling is that the lands were in a state of reservation at the time the grant to the Southern Pacific road was attached.

More Small-Pox.

An alarming outbreak of small-pox has broken out at Virginia City. Last Sunday Doctor Manson was called to vaccinate some children at the Divide. The Doctor went and at once discovered that there were small-pox cases in the vicinity; he at once reported to the health Board; an investigation was had and seven cases were discovered. The houses where the sufferers live were at once quarrentined; but as members of all the families had been mixing with neighbors without restraint, and as the disease had been among them two weeks before Doctor Manson made his discovery, there is no telling how far the infection may have spread. The public schools were at once closed, and the health officers are doing all they can to prevent the spread of the disease. A doctor named Zangerle is severely blamed in the matter. This person had been called in to the first of these cases, but appears to have been too ignorant to know what was the matter with the patient. The Enterprise says he was summoned before the Board of Health and made a long statement from which it was impossible to tell whether he knew that he was treating small-pox patients, or what disease afflicted them. He at first thought it was scarletina, and so reported to Doctor Conn. Then he thought they had the chicken-pox, and then the swine-pox [an unknown thing among medical men], but did not say that at any time did he think they had the small-pox though saying if he thought they had the small-pox he would have so reported. Evidently Zangerle is both ignorant and stupid, and entirely unfit to practice medicine.

Benifit of Artesian Wells.

In Owens valley are many thousand acres of land where if trees, vines, and even alfalfa, were once fairly rooted no further irrigation would be needed. All of this character of land is the best in the valley; but in its present condition it is of no value to any one. It is on this land where artesian wells would be of the greatest value. A comparatively limited supply of water would be enough for rooting trees and vines, and when this should be accomplished on one tract the water could be conducted on to another; and in this way one well would supply water enough to give a start to good sized orchards and vineyards. As already stated, there are thousands of acres in the valley where trees and vines once fairly started would not need further irrigation. If artesian water can be found at all the owner of a well or wells would be independent of ditches, and would enjoy absolute security from all the trouble, delay and expense that too frequently follow the use of ditches. No other project promises such speedy and valuable results for Owens valley as finding artesian wells.

In the upper end of San Joaquin valley are many artesian wells, and boring others is going on rapidly. The Mining and Scientific Press says no rock tools are required. The bore encounters layers of sand and clay, sometimes well compacted, but still easily penetrated. The usual rates for well boring in this region are given as follows: For the first 100 feet, $50; for the second 100 feet, $75; for the third 100 feet, $100, and a proportionate increase for each 100 feet. The casing ordinarily costs from 35 to 50 cents per foot, and the owner of a well is expected to board three men while the work is being done, which takes from three to five weeks, according to the number of accidents that happen during the work, these accidents arising mainly from quicksand choking the pipe and the jamming of the casing.

An Elopement.

Love laughs at locksmiths; he also laughs at distance, though mountains and deserts intervene. There was an elopement from the valley at the beginning of the week. For the present the names of the parties will not be given, in deference to the wishes of the relatives. The lady in the case is sweet sixteen; her birth-day was last Saturday. While attending school in the lower country the girl became acquainted with a young man and an attachment grew up between them. Her relatives were not satisfied, and she was sent to Inyo county to the care of her uncle. There is now reason to believe that a correspondence was kept up between the young people through a third party. Last Monday the girl disappeared from the home of her uncle; some hours passed before she was missed, and when search was made not a trace of her could be found. The uncle of the girl lodged a complaint against the man who is supposed to have been the confidant of the young people, charging him with abduction. The man was easily found and was put under arrest; but refused to give any information about the girl; no trace of whom had yet been found.

Another version of the elopement story is given. It is alleged that there is no young man in the case, but that the girl had simply got tired of her surroundings and resolved to go to friends in Oregon. This was contrary to the wishes of the people who had her in charge here. She got possession of a saddle horse and some money, and being a good rider and having plenty of pluck she started off for Mojave alone. The distance she had to ride is about one hundred and twenty five miles, and all of it through a desert country. In the whole distance there is not a human habitation except at four places; all else is sage brush and sandy desert. Soon after the girl was missed a man was sent after her with a team and carriage. One man who saw her on the way was at Independence on Tuesday; he said she was far ahead of the man who was after her, her horse was in good condition, she was in good spirits and he felt sure that she would get through all right. This person hinted at the possibility of the girl being glided across the mountains to Kern river by some cowboys who are with their stock down on the desert; he said the settlements west of the mountains could be reached in six hours good riding, and the boys would go with a will to aid the girl in her flight. No one has the slightest fear of any harm to the girl other than whatever fatigue she may endure. She is safer among the mountains meeting cowboys than she would be without a protector on the streets of a large city. A city bred girl would be paralyzed with fear at the bare idea of undertaking such a journey as this girl made.

DEATH VALLEY.

Borax and Soda for the World

The following facts in relation to Death Valley are given by Mr. Henry Melone, who returned from there a few days ago. Mr. Melone went to Death Valley as Deputy Assessor. The distances between the various points from Independence to Death Valley are as follows: To Keeler, 32 miles; thence to Darwin, 24 miles; to Shepherd's Cañon, 27 miles; to Post Office Springs, 20 miles; to Coleman's road, 30 miles; to Furnace Creek, in Death Valley, 50 miles; total distance from Independence, 183 miles. At all the points named between Darwin and Furnace Creek there is good water but no buildings of any kind and the traveler must take along everything other than water needed for himself and what animals he may have. The road traverses valleys among a succession of mountain ranges. The mountains are high, very steep, and mostly bare rocks. The narrow valleys between have a scant growth of sagebrush and cactus, but are almost destitute of all other vegetation. Mr. Melone had no discomfort sleeping on the sand, rolled up in one blanket. The weather was very pleasant. A short distance beyond Darwin he met with two men who were going to the Colorado river; they had pack animals and a good outfit and he traveled pleasantly with them till their ways separated before reaching Death Valley.

On arriving at Coleman's borax works Mr. Melone was received with a cordial welcome from Mr. Neuschwander, the Superintendent, and Mr. Maynard, the Foreman. He inspected the borax works carefully. Borax is there in apparently inexhaustible quantity. The deposits are usually but a few inches in thickness where first opened, but get thicker as they are penetrated till they attain a depth of two feet or more. Thousands of acres are covered by the deposit. Adjoining the borax deposits are vast beds of soda and salt. Great mounds of salt lie around glittering white that contain thousands of tons. The salt is fit for use as mined.

The proportion of pure borax contained in the mass ranges from thirty to over ninety percent. Great quantities of pure crystals are found. Vast masses are borate of lime, containing ninety percent of borax. The crude stuff is shoveled into large wagons and hauled to the reduction works close by. Here it is put through a process of boiling purifying and crystalyzing; it is then dried and sacked ready for shipment. The solution in which the borax is first dissolved is drawn off from the tanks, run into ground vats and is there evaporated. The residuum is taken up and worked over; it contains a large percentage of borax and soda. Twenty horses are constantly employed delivering the crude borax at the reduction works. Seven white men and twenty-nine Chinamen are employed; none but white men would be employed if they could be had. From the works the borax is hauled in wagons to Mojave, a distance of 160 miles. The round trip is made in twenty days. Five teams are engaged in this work, twenty animals in each team. The wheels of the wagons are eight inches broad on the face and the tires when new weigh twelve hundred pounds. One new wagon costs twelve hundred dollars.

At Furnace Creek on a tract of thirty acres near the borax works hay enough is cut to feed all the animals employed there. The ground is planted with alfalfa. Nine months in each year a crop is cut monthly; during the months of December, January and February the animals are allowed to graze on the tract. The dwelling for the Superintendent stands ninety feet below the level of the sea. The walls are abobe bricks and are four feet thick. The roof is double, the external covering extends eight feet beyond the walls, forming a veranda entirely around the building. In the hottest weather a person can be comfortable inside the building. A most generous hospitality is extended to all visitors. There is a standing rule that if any prospectors or travelers come along who are short of supplies they shall be amply provided with necessaries to last them till they can reach some place where a stock can be had. Many a poor prospector has blessed William T. Coleman for this generous order.

An Unfortunate Family.

Recently a former business man of Virginia City named D. R. Sohl, committed suicide at Salt Lake. Sohl had left Virginia City and gone to Reno and engaged in business there. He was unfortunate and failed and went to Salt Lake and a few days after arriving there killed himself with a pistol. His wife had three brothers living at Virginia, William, Eli and Rufus Ford. Last Sunday the brothers were preparing a house for their sister at Silver City. William and Eli were unloading furniture from a wagon in front of the house and Rufus was inside the building. A pistol shot was heard and when William and Eli went into the house they found Rufus lying on the floor with a bullet through his brain. The unfortunate young man lived a few hours but was insensible till he died. It is not known if the pistol was fired accidently or with suicidal intent. The Enterprise gives the young man an excellent character.

About half a mile of the upper end of the Eastside canal is the heaviest cutting to be done on the whole work. The entire half mile will be from six to seven feet deep. This is where Mr. McIver now has his force at work. When this piece shall be cut through the canal will be ready for water a short distance below Independence Station. Beyond that there is no heavy cutting and the ground is easy to work for a long distance. Good progress is being made.

Easter Sunday will occur tomorrow. This is one of the two greatest festivals among Christians; the other being Christmas. One commemorates the birth of the founder of Christianity; the other his resurrection from the tomb after being crucified. The life of Christ was the best example of true manhood the world ever saw, and his death the only perfect instance of entire unselfishness. There may be difference of opinion about the miraculous orgin of the founder of christianity; about many circumstances related of his life and about his resurrection after death; but there can be but one feeling of awful reverence for the sublime nobility of his character and for his divine love for, and sympathy with suffering humanity.

THE CAMERA'S PATRONS.

THE PUBLIC APT TO MAKE NEW PHOTOGRAPHERS POPULAR.

A Business Almost Entirely Dependent on the Fluctuations of Public Favor. Progress in the Art of Photographing. The Daguerreotype.

There seems to be no business so entirely dependent on the fluctuations of popular favor as that of the photographer. A moment's reflection on the part of anybody who is acquainted with the history of photographers in New York for the past ten or fifteen years, will show that their business is evidently not subject to the same conditions as is attendant on the business of other trades and professions. Photographers do not start in a small way, build up gradually a paying business and eventually secure an established patronage, which then continues with them without any special effort in the way of advertising.

The popular photographer jumps into his popularity as a general thing inside of a single year, and replaces in public esteem older firms whose names are familiar to everybody, both in private and public life. The older men retire to the background and the artistic character of their pictures is sneered at, and comparatively new men are hailed as the apostles of modern photography and their work described as the latest and the best. The older men are almost forgotten, and their business falls away and they retire to side streets and modest shops. No photographer of fifteen years ago is known as a leading photographer today. The men who then secured the great men of the country, the leading actresses on the stage and the beauties of the drawing room for their subjects, are either out of business altogether or are doing a small trade with modest family people and charging extremely moderate prices.

FICKLENESS OF PUBLIC FAVOR.

A photographer the other day said that he did not believe it was possible for any man or any firm in the business to get to the top and stay there. He had gotten to the top himself once, and he had made it a point to keep up with the times, to use all the modern improvements in photographic materials and processes, and had employed all his spare time devising new and attractive styles of photographs. But notwithstanding all his efforts, both in a business and artistic way, he was not able to keep the leading position he had attained, and for no other reason in the world except that public favor, so far as his business is concerned, is fickle beyond anything that he could describe. He was gradually replaced by new arrivals in the field and saw his customers going to men whom he believed had none of his ability, and whom he knew had but a quarter of his experience. He explained this defection by saying that people who are in the habit of having their photographs taken at stated intervals, have the quality of human vanity in them developed to an unusual extent and are possessed of a continual desire to try new experiments and reach fresh results. They do not expect, perhaps, that the latest photographer will make them out any more beautiful than the one whom they have just left but they expect that he will give them pictures which will give a new significance to their features.

Speaking of keeping up with the times, a photographer said the other day that there was nothing in modern photography which demonstrated its progress more absolutely than the improvements directed to reducing the time necessary for the securing of the impression. Instantaneous photography is the growth of very recent times. Dozens of photographers in New York expose their plates and secure results within a second, but this is by no means instantaneous photography. How great the progress in this matter has really been may be estimated from the fact that when daguerreotypes were first taken in this country, forty odd years ago, it was necessary that the plate should be exposed for fully twenty five minutes before the impression was deemed sufficient for the picture. Of course, in this twenty-five minutes the subject had to sit perfectly still. This was certainly as hard work as any artist's model does today. In fact, no artist's model is expected to pose for that time without rest. Six seconds is now regarded as a very long exposure. —New York Mail and Express.

An Anthropometric Laboratory.

An anthropometric laboratory is a place where a person may have any of his various faculties measured in the best possible way, and where duplicates of his measurements may be preserved as private documents for his own future use and reference. All the various faculties are to be registered. Accordingly, after the exact shape, the cubical contents and the specific gravity of the individual have been ascertained he will be tested for pace on a measured mile on land and a measured 100 yards in the water. The physical basis being thus ascertained, the capacity for self restraint will next be tried. Then will come the memory tests and the trials of originality and intellectual endurance. It would be impossible, except at great length, to explain the various processes available for these latter purposes, but a brief reference may be made to the uses of the register when completed. Evidently the register kept at the laboratory may be made use of as a reference in all cases. To persons about to marry the record will, of course, be valuable and indispensable. Very great benefits will accrue to all classes of people. It will abolish the old test of a man's faculties by the work he does and what comes out of him.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

Cranks at the German Capital.

The number of deranged people trying to gain access to the emperor of Germany is remarkable. Hardly a day passes without such an occurrence. The other day two such unfortunates entered the palace simultaneously. It was a man and a woman. The latter was the wife of a poor boatsman, asserting that she was a near relative of the emperor's and had to see him after years of absence. The man was well dressed, with a look of distinction about him, and a flow of white hair on his head and long whiskers, altogether a venerable looking, sympathetic figure. He said he had engaged to marry the daughter of the king of Italy, and being a German and a subject of the emperor he had to obtain his majesty's permission before perfecting the marriage. Both persons were taken to the insane ward of the Hospital of the Charite at Berlin.—Foreign Letter.

WINTER LIFE IN DAKOTA.

Description of the Method of Constructing Sod Houses on the Prairie.

"I was at the house of an old Scotchman a year or two ago," said an old Dakotan. "Several of us young people were sitting at the table in the living room playing cards. Outside a blizzard was howling. The old man said:

"'I think I will go out to the sheds and see how the stock are.'

"'Don't you go,' I replied.

"'I guess I will.'

"I looked over my shoulder and said: 'See here, old man, don't you try that; you stay right here.' You may think this was considerable fuss to make, as the sheds were not over four rods from the house; but I had become acquainted with winter weather on the prairies. We went on with our game and nothing more was said. About ten minutes later I looked up and the old man was gone. 'Did your father go out?' I asked one of the girls. 'Yes,' she replied, 'and I don't see what keeps him. I wish you would go out and find him.'

"I wrapped up and started out, first taking the precaution to take one end of a rope, which I trailed after me. About half way between the sheds and the house I found the old man on his hands and knees in the snow, which was seven feet deep, crawling about, trying to find the house. He was then nearly dead, and ten minutes more would have finished him. I picked him up, and carried him to the house, where with snow, ice water, and whisky, supplemented with an hour or two of hard work, we managed to save his life."

"How do people manage to live in such a climate?"

"Live? Why, they prepare for it. The early comers generally put up sod houses, and there is nothing in the world so warm as a sod house. You can walk around barefoot on the floor of one, if properly constructed, in the coldest weather. After they have been there long enough settlers generally build log houses, hauling logs thirty or forty miles for the purpose. These houses are warm and comfortable. So long as you don't have to go out you don't know what winter is. But the sod house is not to be treated with disdain, I assure you."

"How are they built?"

"In the first place a frame of boards, the size the house is to be, is put up so as to give the house a nice appearance inside; the roof also is boarded over. Then the sod is cut with a plow, and a bank three or four feet thick is raised all around this frame. Every sod is laid as carefully as a mason lays a brick, the roots up, and all openings are filled in with fine dirt. Openings are made for the windows and doors, which have frames extending from inside to outside. These will contain sometimes three windows for winter—always two. When the sod rampart is raised to the height of the roof, poles are laid on and then sod put over those. The roots hold everything firm. You would be surprised to see the roots. Some of those grass roots are as thick as my finger, and extend down from from ten to fourteen feet."

"What?"

"It's a fact, I assure you. I have followed them down myself when digging wells in that blue joint grass land. Why, a man in plowing has to stop and sharpen his plow every eighty rods if he cares anything for his team. The blacksmith draws out the point, but that and the edge both have to be filed down as sharp as possible, and then, as I say, sharpened every eighty rods. But to return to the sod house. After the outside is completed the inside is finished up to suit the taste and pocket of the proprietor. Some have only the earthen floor, and others have a board floor, and are divided up into two or three rooms. And, I tell you, for winter comfort in Dakota a sod house beats them all. Besides these, there are dugouts on the side of a hill, and occasionally you will meet one on the prairie. The class of settlers that come in there as a rule have to put up with almost everything the first year or two."—Milwaukee Cor. Chicago Times.

The Contribution Boxes.

There need be no fear but that those who want to "pay for their religion," as some like to put it, will be given opportunity to do so. The man who wants to help pay for the preaching of the gospel doesn't need to have a pesky contribution box slid gracefully along under his nose every time he attends service. Nor is there any reason why the amount of money—usually so small—which is taken every Sabbath, in the morning and evening collections, may not be contributed in some other and less awkwardly conspicuous manner. There are many ways in which people can be led to understand that if they wish to contribute they can do so in a quiet and unostentatious way, and there is no doubt whatever but that those who want to give will find a way.—American Magazine.

A SNOWSTORM.

Deformed by tempests, the sweet blue
  Is drowned in clouds of fleecy spray;
On, on, in ranks forever new,
  Forever maddening in their play.

Above, the driving storm; below,
  The earth is fashioned at its will;
Its chisel carves the yielding snow
  To forms beyond all human skill.

But we, warm nested, in the heart
  Of this dim elemental war,
Sit calmly tranquil, or but start
  When rocks the pane with stormier jar.

We look into each other's eyes,
  And see a friendly peace which says,
While on the snowy Cossack flies,
  "Rave ye without, here quiet stays."

This silent, unexpressed delight
  Grows brighter so severely set;
Heart warm against the snowy white,
  The rose of joy burns warmer yet.

Our kindling of the soul can make
  Those wintry tumults disappear,
And all their dreariness partake
  Its own illumined atmosphere.
—Thomas Gold Appleton.

Protecting Theatres from Fire.

As a precaution against fire, some scenery at one of the Brussels theatres was coated two years ago with a composition largely consisting of alum and asbestos. Recent experiments with the scenery so prepared demonstrate that the canvas can thus be rendered perfectly incombustible. It is said that this simple application does not interfere in any way with the material upon which the scenes are painted, nor does it have any prejudicial effect upon the colors employed.—Chicago Times.

The Supply of Peanuts.

The supply of peanuts comes almost wholly from Virginia, Tennessee and North Carolina. Virginia is the banner peanut growing state, averaging 2,000,000 bushels yearly. Tennessee comes next with an average of 500,000 bushels, and North Carolina's production averages 150,000 bushels. The estimated supply for 1888 is 3,300,000 bushels, which includes the nearly 600,000 bushels of last year's crop which still remain in the market.—New York Mail and Express.

BULGARIAN FUNERALS.

Singular Burial Customs Described by an American Tourist.

While on a tour on one occasion, as I had risen in the morning from the board on which I slept, I went out to a fountain to wash. Hardly had I come to the crystal stream before I found that within the khan two women were carrying around large copper dishes filled with a dish which is called "bulgore." It is not very different from boiled wheat. They came to me in turn, both of them, and with a large wooden spoon gave me a liberal supply. I inquired what it meant, and was answered that they were sisters, and that from their house a young man had recently died and that they were thus feeding his hungry soul, which was wandering, according to their report, "who knows where." These two women went to every house in the large village, and gave to every person, large and small, a heaping spoonful of this viand. It is quite common to carry the dead body through the streets on a bier and to place it in a box, which is utterly unworthy the name of coffin, on the brink of the grave. But very many are buried without the least thing, save cloth wrapped around the body.

I once attended a funeral in a village four hours' distance from Samokov. When we arrived, the young men, children of the dead women, were hammering in the yard. The hour for the funeral obsequies had arrived. I asked the young men what they were doing and they answered coolly: "Making a box to put mother in." The sisters were howling and wringing their hands and pacing to and fro. After the "box" was finished the body was placed within and the funeral service gone through with. There was no cover, and quite a hunt was instituted to find a board which could be appropriated. At last one was found which the brook had washed down and left on a bank near by. It was too short at both ends, but never mind; they are shorter where there are none. The sons then took up the would-be coffin, bearing the remains of their mother to the grave. Some of the relatives had been called away from the digging of the grave by the announcement that the "box was ready." These hastened back after the ceremony to their unfinished work. I found myself, in following the remains, the central person in quite a large crowd. Some walked quietly and sadly and weeping; others went jumping along the road as if in great glee. A crowd of small children trooped along on the outside. Arriving at the grave, we found it both too short and too narrow to admit the remains, so we all took turns at digging. Finally, the work completed, the cover was laid on the top, while the husband of the late departed stood down in the grave and stamped the dirt down which others threw in. The worst feature of the whole was that the family were mightily pleased, and said, as they expressed their gratitude at our coming, that it had been the most orderly funeral in the village.—Boston Transcript.

TRIBUTES TO CHARITY.

What New York Contributes Annually for the Relief of the Poor.

New York contributes annually for home charity upward of $7,360,000. Of this amount the city gives through the Department of Charities and Correction $1,500,000; the charity societies and institutions, which are supported by voluntary contributions, distribute $4,000,000; the churches $360,000; while the gifts of benevolent households can be estimated at $1,500,000. The figures given are furnished in the annual report of the Charity Organization Society. During the year 1887 there were 27,400 appeals made to this society and other organizations, and in nearly every case investigations were made. It was found that but 64 per cent. were deserving of continuous relief; 24.4 per cent. required only temporary relief; 52.2 per cent. needed employment, and 17 per cent. were impostors. There are 228 organized agencies in New York dispensing charity; 49 volunteer societies; 30 asylums, and 148 churches. These are of all denominations, but no distinction is made in helping the poor and needy. The Charity Organization Society makes it it a business to punish frauds. Last year its officers had 1,215 street beggers arrested, and most of these were sentenced. There were 74 per cent. of this number able-bodied persons, and only 6 per cent were found to be really destitute.—Demorest's Monthly.

—You will save your horse the pain of a sore mouth if you will always dip the bit in a bucket of cold water before putting it in his mouth. This "takes the frost out" of the bit. If you want to know what would happen if you did not do this, put your tongue against the bit after it shall have been hanging all night in a zero temperature. You will not take it away as easily as you will put it there, and when you shall get loose you will leave a piece of skin behind. If the bit be put in cold water first this will not happen.—Troy Times.

LUCKY JOHN TRIMBLE.

When the Aurora papers announced that John Trimble, of 334 South Broadway this city, had been fortunate enough to draw a tenth share on the $50,000 prize of The Louisiana State Lottery, it was not generally believed, but this same John Trimble is probably to-day the most contented man in Aurora, for he has in the bank the snug little sum of $4,995, the profits of his investment in the lottery. The remaining $5 went for expenses. Mr. Trimble was seen by an Express reporter and acknowledged that he had received a check for the above amount and stated that it was his intention to use the money in his new business, he having lately purchased the cut stone business of Isaac Edwards.

The lucky ticket which drew the $50,000 prize was number 73,185. Mr. Trimble had a tenth interest in this ticket for which he paid one dollar. He took his good luck very coolly and philosophically. This is not the first time that he has patronized the lottery, but although he has never before drawn a very large amount, he claims that what he had received before his big haul paid back all the tickets had cost him.—Aurora (Ills.) Express, Jan. 30.

CATARRH.

A New Home Treatment or the Cure Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness and Hay Fever.

The microscope has proved that these diseases are contagious, and that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the upper air passages and eustachian tubes. The eminent scientists, Tyndall, Huxley and Beale endorse this, and these authorities cannot be disputed. The regular method of treating these diseases has been to apply an irritant remedy weekly and even daily, thus keeping the delicate membrane in a constant state of irritation, allowing it no chance to heal, and as a natural consequence of such treatment not one permanent cure has ever been recorded. It is an absolute fact that these diseases cannot be cured by any application made oftener than once in two weeks, for the membrane must get a chance to heal before an application is repeated. It is now seven years since Mr. Dixon discovered the parasite in catarrh and formulated his new treatment, and since then his remedy has become a household word in every country where the English language is spoken. Cures effected by him seven years ago are cures still there having been no return of the disease.

So highly are these remedies valued that ignorant imitators have started up everywhere pretending to destroy a parasite of which they know nothing, by remedies, the results of the application of which they are equally ignorant. Mr. Dixon's remedy is applied only once in two weeks, and from one to three applications effect a permanent cure in the most aggravated cases.

Mr. Dixon sends a pamphlet describing his new treatment on the receipt of stamp to pay postage. The address is A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 King street west, Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

PEACE ON EARTH

Awaits that countless army of martyrs, whose ranks are constantly recruited from the victims of nervousness and nervous diseases. The price of the boon is a systematic course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the finest and most genial of tonic nervines, pursued with reasonable persistence. Eccentric, leasanter, and safer this than to wash the disturbing department with pseudo-tonics, alcoholics or the reverse, bad extracts, nerve foods, narcotics, sedatives and poisons in disguise. "Tired Nature's sweet restorer balmy sleep," is the providential reward of weak nerves, and this glorious franchise being usually the consequences of sound digestion and increased vigor, the great stomachic which insures both is probably deserving of repose at the required time. Nothing more effectually awakens the individual who uses it, but vigorous, clear headed and tranquil. Use the bitters also in fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney troubles, constipation and biliousness.

AN UNDISPUTED TEST OF MERIT.

A medicine that has been a household remedy for over fifty years and used in that time by more than 150,000,000 persons must have great merit. Such a medicine is found in BRANDRETH'S PILLS. This fact illustrates the value of these pills better than any statement of the proprietors. It will be observed that the dose required to cure is small. One or two pills taken every night for ten or twenty days will cure dyspepsia, costiveness, rheumatism, liver complaint, all female complaints and weaknesses.

THE SWEETEST GIRL IN SCHOOL.

"She's the sweet st girl in school!" enthusiastically exclaimed one young miss to another, as they passed down the street together. "Edith is so kind, and gentle, and unselfish, everyone likes her. And she has lovely golden hair and pretty eyes. Isn't it a pity her complexion is so bad; it spoils her looks. And then she has such dreadful headaches". The girls skipped along, but it happened Edith's mother had heard what they had said. It set her thinking. What could be done for those headaches and the rough, muddy complexion, that was such a trial to her gentle daughter. She recalled what she had read of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and on the spur of the moment she slipped into a drug store and bought a supply. Edith took it faithfully, with the result that it cleared her disordered blood, relieved the headaches, made her skin soft, fair and rosy, and now she is not only the "sweetest girl in school," but the most beautiful.

BILL NYE'S BARBER.

Misfortune Encountered in an Attempt to Have His One Hair Trimmed.

To-day I got shaved at a barber-shop, where I begged the operator to kill me and put me out of my misery.

I have been accustomed to gentle care and thoughtfulness at home, and my barber handles me with the utmost tenderness. I was, therefore, poorly prepared to meet the man who this morning filled my soul with woe.

I know that I have not deserved this, for while others have berated the poor barber and swore about his bad breath and never-ending clatter and his general heartlessness, I have never said any thing that was not filled with child-like trust and hearty good-will towards him.

I have called the attention of the public to the fact that sometimes customers had bad breath and were restless and mean, while being operated on, and then when they are all fixed up nicely they put their hats on and light a cigar and hold up their finger to the weary barber and tell him that they will see him more subsequently.

Now, however, I feel differently.

This barber, no doubt, had never heard of me. He thought I was an ordinary plug who didn't know any thing about luxury.

I shall mark a copy of this paper and send it to him. Then while he is reading it I will step up behind him with a pick handle and kill him. I want him to be reading this when I kill him, because it will assist the coroner in arriving at the immediate cause of his death.

The first whiff I took of this man's breath I knew that he was rum's maniac.

He had the Jim James in an advanced stage. Now, I don't object to being shaved by a barber who is socially drunk, but when the mad glitter of the maniac is in his eye and when I can see that he is debating the question of whether he will cut my head off and let it drop over the back of the chair or choke me to death with a leather brush, it makes me nervous and fidgetty. He honed his razor on his breath, in fact.

This man made up his mind three times that he would kill me, and some one came in just in time to save me.

His chair was near the window, and there was a hole in the blind, so that when he was shaving the off side of my face he would turn my head up in such a position that I could look up into the middle of the sun. My attention had never before been called to the appearance of the sun as it looked to the naked eye, and I was a good deal surprised.

The more I looked into the center of the great orb of day the more I was filled with wonder at the might and power that could create it. I began to pine for death immediately, so that I could be far away among the heavenly bodies, and in a land where no barber with the delirium triangles can ever enter.

The barber held my head down so that the sun could shine into my darkened understanding, until I felt that my brain had melted and was floating around and washing about in my skull like warm butter.

His hand was very unsteady, too. I lost faith in him on the start, when he cut off a mole under my chin and threw it in the cuspidore. I did not care especially for the mole, and did not need it much, but at the same time I had not decided to take it off till the weather got warmer. In fact, I had worn it so long that I had becom attached to it. It had also become attached to me. This is why I could not restrain my tears when the barber cut it off, and then stepped back to the other end of the room to see how I looked without it.—Bill Nye at large, in N. Y. World.

COLD WAVE OF '36.

The Remarkable Change in Temperature on December 20, 1836.

There are citizens living in Springfield to-day who distinctly remember the sudden and remarkable cold wave of Tuesday, December 20, 1836. Though over half a century ago so wonderful was the phenomenon of that day that the recollection of it remains vividly impressed on the minds of those who were here at the time. Such a change, from warm to bitter cold as then occurred was never experienced before nor has been since. For several days previous the weather had been unusually warm for the season of the year and considerable rain had fallen. Nothing unusual occurred until about two o'clock in the afternoon when a large black cloud was seen to rise in the northwest, which was followed by a loud, roaring noise, and the atmosphere became freezing cold.

Thomas A. Ragsdale, who was at that time living in what is known as "old town," said he was on his way to the business part of the city when the wave first struck the city, and that before he had reached the old corner drug store the water in the gutters was frozen solid. Thomas Knox, the weather prophet, said that in many places through the country ducks and geese had been frozen in the ponds before they could swim ashore; that the hogs and chickens had in many instances been frozen fast in the muddy barn lots. "It was nothing uncommon," said another old settler, "during the next few weeks, when riding through the country, to see six or eight hogs frozen fast in the mud along the road." Dr. Preston, of Breckinridge, in a history of Sangamon County says: "It had been raining slowly all the fore part of the day and the thermometer was at least forty degrees above zero and the first blast of the tempest brought it down to zero in a second."—Springfield (Ill.) Journal.

CUTTING OFF NOSES.

Strange Happenings in the Land of the Nawab of Junagadh.

The Nawab of Junagadh is a Mussulman, and is the premier chief in Kathiawar. The capital town is also called Junagadh, and is considered by many to be one of the quaintest cities in India, while it yields to none in antiquity and historical interest. The "uparkot," or citadel, is of great age, and is known to have been a stronghold three hundred years before the Christian era. The city is just on the borders of the Gir, which is a long strip of country, densely covered by primeval forests, which, apart from other things, are renowned as affording nearly the last retreat to the lion in Northwestern India. From the nature of the country side it is hardly surprising that from the earliest times the district has been a place of refuge for lawless men. Quite recently the Mekranis, an outlawed class, have given much trouble. They rob, assault and kill peaceful travelers whenever they can, and one of their favorite amusements is to deprive their victims of their noses, and thus stamp them forever with the mark of the Mekranis' power. "When we were in Junagadh," writes Surgeon-Major Lewis A. Irving, "there were quite a dozen noseless patients in the hospital there, and the Parsee doctor was hard at work fitting them with nasal appendages derived from their own cheeks and foreheads. Great precautions were taken during His Excellency's visit, to prevent any unpleasant surprise. Guards were posted at every turn while we were exploring the neighborhood.

"Outside the city the Girnar hill rises out of the Gir forest. It is upward of three thousand feet in height, difficult to climb, and was a place of pilgrimage centuries before Christ. A number of Jain temples crown its summit, while beyond them rears into the sky a great rocky crest, called the Bhairava Jap, or 'Adoration of the Terrific One,' from which, in days gone by, multitudes of people have cast themselves down in the hope of realizing eternal happiness. Should a man survive, however, it was assured that he would rule the world. The drop is sheer for fully one thousand feet. Not more than twenty years ago three persons took the leap, and a short time since an ascetic was bent on following their example, but was stopped by the authorities. The temples, like all Jain temples, are spotlessly clean; the Jain may not enter them without first bathing, and are not allowed in any way to defile them. At every point of vantage along the road up the hill we came on posts of wild-looking men, variously armed, and on the lookout for possible Mekranis. The Jain never take the life of any animal if they can avoid it; place cloths over their mouths in case they should swallow a fly, and before they sit down brush the seat carefully in order to remove careless crawlers. In their towns also they establish bird refuges where grain and water are always provided for any feathered visitors. At Ahmedabad the streets are full of these shelters, and birds and squirrels find no lack of entertainment, thanks to the offerings of pious Jains."—London Spectator.

'SQUIRE AND JUDGE.

How a Colored Magistrate Was Cheated by His Superior in Authority.

A negro justice of the peace called on a circuit judge.

"Come in, 'squire," said the judge. "What can I do for you?"

The 'squire sat down and twirled his thumbs. "I say what can I do for you, 'squire?"

"Oh, I know whut yer said," giving to his eyes that slow and tremulous squint which, with a negro, is expressive of disgust. "I know what yer say, an' I also know what yer's done. Whut made yer ack dater way in dat haug case?"

"What hog case?"

"W'y, dat case twixt Simons an' Boyle. I'sided it in de fabor of Boyle, but w'en it wuz fotch up yere w'y verse'f verses de'cision an 'gins it ter Simons."

"The jury did so because the law and the facts were on his side."

"De jury! W'y man, ain't you got no furder erlong yit den ter fool wid er jury? I'd like ter see er jury take er case 'way from me. Come er lettin' dat jury run erway wid dat case an' gin it ter dat man Simons w'en he already owes me er dollar fur some fraish meat I let him hab las' fall. "Get out, you old rascal."

He cast an indignant look upon the judge, moved to the door, stopped and said: "Er law'vided ergin itse'f kain't stan', and de fust thing you know you gwine tumble offen dat bench. Go erhead an' git yo' juries ter beat folks outen dar money. Go on, an' when yer hears suthin' drap look roun' an' you'll find it wuz yerse'lf, sah."—Arkansaw Traveler.

MANAGING HORSES.

Details That Will Be Observed by Every Thoughtful Farmer.

In the care of horses there are many little details, each perhaps of itself considered unimportant, on which, to a great extent, the health of the horse and his ability to do the required work depends. Whatever interferes with the comfort and thrift of the horse intended for constant use depreciates the value of his services. In no other way, perhaps, is a horse made so uncomfortable as when kept in a stable so carelessly built that the wind and cold pass through cracks between the boards on the sides and chill the animal. He is fastened in his stall, and there is no opportunity for him to escape the chilling currents. Some stables are built with a basement, and the floor above is laid in such away that cold air is constantly passing through from below. No horse can rest comfortably in such a stable. He is in special danger when he comes into such a place while heated from rapid or heavy work, for a blanket is likely to be thrown over him, with the idea that it will afford all the protection needed, while in fact the most sensitive portions of the body, and the limbs also, are left exposed to draughts of cold air. This frequently brings on congestion of some of the vital organs. When the horse is brought in warm and sweating, he should be well protected by a blanket large enough to prevent currents of cold air from striking him, and his legs should be well rubbed, to prevent soreness and swelling. If the horse is much fatigued, it will be desirable to bandage the legs with flannel and walk him about until the circulation has resumed its normal condition.

Care should be taken to see that the horse has proper food and sufficient supply of it to keep him in good condition and spirits. Some kinds of food will agree with one horse and not with another. When it is found that a certain food affects a horse unfavorably, a change should, of course, be made at once; yet how many fail to notice this, and the horse loses condition for want of proper attention. Oats will be found the best food for driving horses, as corn has the tendency to produce indigestion. A little oat-meal and bran, given occasionally, will keep the bowels in good condition, preventing constipation. Many feed too much hay; this should be given in moderate quantity, and most of it at night, after the horse returns from his day's work.

In arranging the mangers, the comfort of the horse should be studied. These are very often placed so high that the horse is uncomfortable all the while when eating. The natural position of the horse when eating is to have the head down, and for this reason the feeding box should be placed so that the horse can eat without having his head so high that mastication and swallowing are difficult. In many ways the comfort of the horse in the stable can be promoted, and the watchful eye of the owner, who knows what should be done, will often be necessary to prevent neglect on the part of those who have the daily care of horses.—National Live-Stock Journal.

ELIZABETH THOMPSON.

A Woman Philanthropist and Some of Her Charitable Works.

One of the greatest of women philanthropists, and about whom society knows little or nothing, is Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, of Boston. Her income is about $50,000 a year, which she receives quarterly, and it is said that she is often penniless before the end of the quarter. She has no children, has no house or home, does not keep a carriage, never goes to the theater, never read but two novels in her life and never possessed but one velvet dress. She spends her time and money in charity, and that without identifying herself with the objects of her generosity. When the yellow fever epidemic roused the sympathies of the North she said: "I will not give a cent for the present relief, but I will give any money to investigate its causes, nature and to prevent it in future." And she did. Congress authorized the Yellow Fever Commission, in which Surgeon General Woodward lost his life, and Mrs. Thompson paid its expenses. The list of some of Mrs. Thompson's benefactions give an idea of their impersonal character. The New York Liberal Club, the Social Science Association, the Peabody Academy of Science, the Rugby scheme of Thomas Hughes, have all received from her substantial aid. She founded the town of Logansport, at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. In Salina County, Kan., she gave 640 acres and $300 each to the colonists settling on it. She put up the building used by the Concord School of Philosophy. "As for the discussions, I must confess I don't care for them. But it is a good thing to have a place where any body with an idea can go without being knocked down for it," she said. She paid for Mr. Steele Mackaye's lectures before the Art Students' League. She admired Rev. Mr. Alger's writings, and in his failing health guaranteed his salary of $6,000 to give him a year of rest and recreation abroad. She helped to support the first Free Training School for Women. She enabled Stephen Pearl Andrews to bring out his colored universalogy. Her greatest enthusiasm is for inventors, and many a device owes its success to her. She is the only woman who has the freedom of the floor of the House.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A POPULAR PHRASE.

Graphic Illustration of "Coming Out of the Little End of the Horn."

An ancient painting was recently discovered in a country shop at Richmond, Surrey, England, from which, it is supposed, this saying originated. It measures eighteen inches by twenty-two inches long, is in a good state of preservation, and is described as follows: Upon a tree, whose branches extend to each side of the picture, hangs by a red belt with gold tassel an enormous curved horn, the ends upwards. At the extreme left stands a man with black velvet flat cap, and surcoat trimmed with fur, rough, and gold chains on the breast. He is superintending the action of a man attired in a purple doublet, profusely slashed, who wears a large felt hat and a cloak, with a dagger in his girdle, and is engaged in thrusting into the large end of the horn an unfortunate wretch, whose trunk and legs (the latter loosely bound together with a rope, the end of which is held by the gold-chained gentleman) are inverted, and are the only portions of the body visible at that part of the picture. But at the little end of the horn, about six feet away as the crow flies (or across the radius of this instrument of torture), but nine feet along the curved surface, appear the unhappy head and one arm of the victim. At the right stands a man clad only in a shirt and ragged coat, wringing his hands with a woe-begone expression depicted in his countenance. On a black ground at the bottom of the picture is the inscription: "This horn embleme here doth showe of overtishipp what harme doth growe from comeing out the little ende thereof." On either side of the tree are the words in semi-gothic character: "The Sea of Trubble." Above the head of the personage in the velvet cap is the citation: "Psalms 37, 26: But he is ever merciful and lendeth and hissede enjoyeth the blessing." The wearer of the gold chain is probably the sheriff, possibly the creditor, who has brought the poor fellow who was so foolish as to undertake sureteship, bound to the tormentor. He is putting him through the horn, with elongates, and compresses him in a most distressing fashion. Whether the beggarly man, who is wringing his hands, is the debtor himself after his passage through the horn, or one of his impoverished family, there are no means of determining. The picture, a most graphic illustration, at least, of the proverb, "Coming out of the little end of the horn," is in a good state of preservation, though it is thought to be upwards of two hundred years old. The name of the artist is unknown.—Johannes Factotum, in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

REMARKABLE INVENTION.

Something Startling for Lovers of Amateur Photography.

Amateur photography has made another long stride forward. Hitherto the only means of photographing at night have been by means of the kerosene, or calcium, or electric lights. All of these demanded more or less paraphernalia, and were not portable to any available degree. Magnesia wire, when burned, was known to produce a light of strong actinic quality, and a lamp had been devised with which to burn it for photographic purposes. It was not a satisfactory light, however, as it was unsteady and liable to go out. From magnesium, however, Dr. H. G. Piffard has devised exactly the thing desired, and he recently explained his invention.

It consists in powdered magnesium spread upon gun-cotton. The ignition of gun-cotton furnishes the heat necessary to set fire to the magnesium, and the result is a brilliant flash, powerful enough to sufficiently expose the plate, and easily available under any circumstances. The photograph is instantaneous. The doctor first discussed a German powder invented for the purpose, stating that while its light effects were excellent, its very explosive quality made it a dangerous article either to handle or have about. He next discussed and exhibited a mixture of four parts of gunpowder and one part of magnesium, which, when flashed, answered the purpose desired. It was neither as convenient nor effective, however, as the gun-cotton combination. After burning samples of these and showing their effects, he fired a cartridge of magnesium and gun-cotton from an ordinary revolver, showing that the flash was quite sufficient for an instantaneous photograph. He then proceeded to darken the room and to photograph Mr. Robert Roosevelt. The camera was adjusted, and as the cap was removed the doctor touched a match to a small piece of powdered cotton. The light flashed in the darkness, and when, some minutes later, the developed plate appeared, an excellent negative of Mr. Roosevelt was the result. Several portraits taken the night before were exhibited, and the practical value of the invention was indisputably established.

The result will be that the amateur photographer will henceforth go a gunning in the darkness and lay out on a plate every thing he may choose to shoot at. The camera will be fitted to a pistol barrel or the pistol barrel to the camera and cocking the weapon will expose the plate. As soon as the weapon is aimed the flash from the muzzle will instantly serve to photograph the object, and the game will be securely bagged in a moment. The fleeing thief, the expression of the man who treads upon the unforseen carpet-tack, as well as that of the husband out late who is trying to assume an expression of indifferent sobriety before he lights the domestic gas, will now adorn the albums, where they have hitherto been unknown. The invention is valuable commercially, one photographer stating that he had concluded to make use of it in his gallery. It will also greatly widen the fields of amusement and experiment which have attracted some thousands to amateur photography.—Philadelphia Evening Telegram.

COOKING AS AN ART.

The Elevating Influence of Domestic Duties Well Performed.

No fair-minded person, looking at the subject through the clear medium of reason, would say there was any thing dishonorable in cooking, and there is surely nothing that indicates moral perversity in the acts of sweeping, dusting and washing dishes. There is nothing in housework that vitiates the moral or weakens the physical system. And yet housework is the very employment that working girls shun as if it were pollution; the work which all native-born American women regard as a disgrace.

If the skill required in doing a class of work may be taken as a standard of its respectability, then surely cooking is as respectable as telegraphing, or book-keeping, or type-writing. Cooking is a chemical process, and the good cook should know as much of the constituents with which she deals, their chemical affinities, the proportions in which they should be mixed, and their reactions upon each other, as the chemists knows about his salts and acids in his laboratory. It takes well-nigh as much skill to manage a stove as it does to manage a chemist's retort. Cooking, rightly considered, is a mysterious alchemy, a field of occult science into which no untrained novice should thrust her awkward hands. Down with the uneducated cook! There is poison in her baking-pan and death beneath her pie crust.

The good cook is the promoter of peace in families, the friend of virtue, the handmaiden of piety. How can the priest mount his pulpit stairs with right feeling towards God and man with his amateur cook's dyspeptic biscuit in his stomach? The poor cook is the one general enemy of mankind. Fed upon her handiwork, the poet's airy dreams dissipate in nightmares, the statesmen's schemes of statscraft degenerate into school-boy fancies, and the hitherto victorious General marches his veteran army to defeat.

But, in all seriousness, cooking is an art that requires long practice and much natural aptitude. This is a fact that is recognized by men whose business largely consists in cooking, and the cooks of the great hotels of the country are paid as much salary as our college presidents. And yet cooking seems to be the one accomplishment that women hate to learn.—Yankee Blade.

CARDINAL MANNING.

The Favorable Impression He Made on an American Visitor.

Not much of the pomp and splendor of the Roman purple here, I thought, as I stood at the entrance of a large but severely plain house, of no particular style of architecture, within a short walk of the Houses of Parliament. Yet this was the episcopal residence—the titular palace of the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster. I had some trouble in finding the place. A policeman who was sunning himself around the next corner said he had never heard of Cardinal Manning.

The door of the mansion was opened by a middle-aged woman, very plainly dressed. I entered a wide hall which was almost destitute of furniture. The woman who had admitted me opened a door to the right, and I found myself in a large well-lighted library, the sides of which were filled with book-cases reaching from the floor to the ceiling, and containing about 10,000 volumes of works in every department of literature, although theology, philosophy and history predominated.

The furniture of the Cardinal's library was of the plainest kind, consisting of an oblong table, half a dozen leather seat chairs, and a cheap carpet of a neutral tint. On the walls were several pictures, among which I noticed portraits of Pius IX., Leo XIII., Cardinal Wiseman and King Edward the Confessor.

While I was turning over the pages of a work on the Roman antiquities the library door opened, and a tall, slender, delicate figure glided into the room. The small red cap told me I was in the presence of the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminister, Henry Edward Manning. His simple, gentle manners made me feel at home at once. His voice was singularly sweet and winning, but exquisitely modulated.

I found the Cardinal deeply interested in the United States. Like many of his intelligent countrymen, he looks upon America as the country of the future, where the mental and the physical development of mankind are destined to attain their perfection. The Cardinal is greatly interested in the temperance cause, and attributes most of the misery of the poorer classes to the vice of intemperance. The Irishman drinks from joviality, the Englishman from brutality, and it is easier to reform an Irish than an English drunkard.

It is not generally known that Cardinal Manning was a married man. While an Arch-deacon in the Church of England he married Miss Serjeant, whose two sisters married Bishop Wilberforce and Henry Wilberforce, his brother. Mrs. Manning lived only a few months after her marriage, and her death filled the sensitive soul of her husband with a deep and lasting sorrow, and turned him more and more to a life of entire spirituality. Cardinal Manning was born in 1809, the same year that witnessed the birth of Alfred Tennyson. His father was a member of Parliament and Governor of the Bank of England. Young Manning, after a preparatory education at Harrow, entered Balliol College, Oxford, where he distinguished himself no less by his scholarship than by the polish of his manners. He became a fellow of Merton College at the early age of twenty-four, and Archdeacon of Chichester before he was thirty-three. At that age the future Cardinal Archbishop seemed very far from the Catholic Church, for just at that time he preached so violent a tirade against "Popery" that Dr. Newman, who was then preparing to join the church, declined to see him the next time he called. While holding orders in the Church of England, Dr. Manning maintained the spiritual grace of baptism, and when this doctrine was denied by Mr. Gorham, and the view of the latter was pronounced tenable by the Church of England, Manning "felt the very ground on which he stood cut from under him," and shaking from his feet the dust of the church of his ancestors entered the Church of Rome. His rise was rapid. He founded the order of Oblates of St. Charles of Borromeo, was raised to provost of Westminister, and became a great favorite of Cardinal Wiseman, who recommended him to the Holy See as worthy of the honorary title of Monsignor. When Wiseman died, in 1865, Pope Pius IX. raised Monsignor Manning to the vacant See of Westminster, and in 1875 he was created a Cardinal.

Cardinal Manning is a frequent guest at luxurious banquets, but the ascetic churchman in the midst of such feasts makes his dinner off a baked potato, a piece of beef, and a glass of water. The Cardinal is an early riser, getting up at five in summer and six in winter. After half an hour's meditation, he says mass in his private chapel, and then passes thirty minutes in thanksgiving. He breakfasts at seven in summer and eight in winter, and then passes an hour or two over his correspondence, and devotes the rest of the morning to literary work, and to matters belonging to his archdiocese.

—The loss of life and property on the great lakes has been greater this year than in any year since 1883. Two hundred and four lives have been lost and seventy-three vessels of 20,687 registered tons went down, representing a loss of $792,000 on hulls and $408,400 on cargoes. If the minor losses be added the whole loss would exceed $2,500,000.

—A Boston reporter instructed his girl, who was heiress to $200,000, to "write only on one side of the paper and to sign your name as a guarantee of good faith," and she walked right off and married a plumber.—Detroit Free Press.

NEW DISCOVERIES IN CHEMISTRY.

Chemical Reproductions of the Valuable Principles in Natural Products.

It will be a long time before the farmer finds himself supplanted by the chemical laboratory in the production of such commodities as sugar, tea, alcohol, drugs and dye stuffs, though sanguine chemists tell us that the recent triumphs of their science indicate the probability that these and other articles will some day be profitably produced from purely inorganic materials. Synthetic chemistry, or the forming of compounds by recombinations of chemical elements, is making steady progress, and has already affected agriculture.

Mr. Robert Hugh Mills, in a recent lecture, called attention to the fact that the cultivation of madder has been almost destroyed by the chemical discovery that its identical coloring matter can be cheaply produced from coal tar. The production of indigo is also threatened by an artificial production which the chemists have discovered. A while ago it was found that the cinchona tree could be profitably planted in India, and a fine new field of industry was believed to have opened for the farmers of that country. Scores of chemists, however, have been at work upon the synthesis of quinine, and their researches have advanced so far that the prediction is now confidently made that the manufacture of the principle of quinine will soon be a commercial success, and that cinchona planting will become a thing of the past. These chemical reproductions of the valuable principles inherent in natural products are often easier to handle and utilize than the products from which they have hitherto been derived, and thus the tendency of manufactures is to substitute artificial for natural sources of supply.

The problem of sugar making from inorganic materials has engaged some chemists for a number of years. The synthesis of glucose by Fischer and Tafel is said to promise an ample supply of this commodity without the aid of grapes or starch. Two years ago some German chemists announced that they had produced saccharose, the equivalent of cane sugar, by passing an electric current through a mixture of starch, sulphuric acid and water. Nothing has yet been heard of the commercial value of this new product, and there is no reason to think it will prove a dangerous rival to the sweets we derive from the cane and the beet. Some sugar growers, however, have been prophesying for years that something would happen to ruin the sugar industry, and their alarm receives a fresh impetus at every new discovery like that of Remsen's saccharine, an exceedingly sweet article produced from coal tar. The day may come when processes of sugar making by the use of inorganic materials will seriously affect the sugar planter, but there is no reason as yet to believe that his industry will soon be imperiled.

Legislation has intervened in some places to protect the dairy farmer against oleomargarine, even where this product is honestly sold as artificial butter. It is not to be expected that in many cases where science supplies us with a desirable substitute for any product, the law can be successfully invoked to keep the world from reaping the benefit of increasing knowledge. Future discoveries may compel the farmer to cease raising some produce by which he has thrived, or to change and improve his methods of agriculture; but it is certain that the tillers of soil will continue to supply the chief resources of food and apparel.—New York Sun.

Verifying an Old Legend.

Readers of the saga of the Burned Njal, translated by Sir George Dasent, cannot have forgotten the terrible conclusion, the burning of old Njal's house with all his family. This deed was almost the last of a series of man slayings, the result of an Icelandic vendetta or blood feud. The date was about the time of the conversion of Iceland to Christianity, that conversion having been rather incomplete so far. Now people have often asked whether this event, so renowned in history, ever took place. According to Nature, a member of the Icelandic Archaeological Society has excavated the site assigned to Bergthorsholl, Njal's house, by tradition. He found at a certain depth the ashes of a burned house and also some curious lumps of a fatty substance. Being analyzed, these proved to be skyr, a kind of buttermilk, apparently, which had undergone the action of rennet. Now the saga expressly says that pailfuls of skyr were thrown by the women of the house on the fire in the attempt to extinguish it. This confirmation is very curious, if not, perhaps, very cogent.—London Daily News.

Paying Children for Everything.

Three young ladies were walking down Woodward avenue the other day, the damsel in the middle talking volubly in a very audible tone. She said:

"Why, they are paid for everything. They got $100 each for not having their ears pierced; $100 each for not becoming engaged until they are 21, and when the rest of the family went abroad and didn't take ——, she cried and got $100. It's $100 for this and a $100 for that all the time. Then there is their brother. He's delicate, you know, and he gets $1 a day for not eating dessert, $1 a day for going to bed at 9 o'clock and when he is sick he gets $2 a day for taking his medicine. And spend money! Why, girls, it's just awful! They spend more in a—," and they passed out of ear shot.—Detroit Free Press.

One of the Sea's Dangers.

A curious acoustic phenomenon, sometimes observed at sea, has been termed by M. Fizeau, the "mirage of sound," from its analogy to certain well known phenomena of light. The sound waves are deflected upward to a very marked extent under the influence of strata of air of various temperatures, and to this effect are ascribed numerous collisions between vessels having powerful fog signals.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A Big Canal Project.

A scheme for constructing a canal deep enough for transatlantic steamers, from the sea to the city of Brussels, Belgium, has been submitted to the city council. The company will undertake to finish the work, and begin running steamers from Brussels to New York within three years from the date of the concession.—Foreign Letter.

SATURDAY, APRIL 7 ..... 1888

The mining disaster last week at the Rich Hill colliery, Missouri, is one of the worst that ever happened. Of course it was known to the miners and to the mine managers that large quantities of inflammable gas were in the mine. The State of Missouri has a mine Inspector whose duty it is to examine the mines and see that all necessary precautions are taken for the safety of the miners. This official had been at the Rich Hill mine only a few days before the accident and reported everything in the mine to be in first rate order. He must have known that he was lying when he made such a report. Most of these Inspectors are pot-house politicians, who will make any kind of a report for a five dollar piece, or even for a bottle of whisky. Very recently a steamer blew up at Vallejo and swept into eternity a large number of men who were going to work, leaving widows and orphans in beggary. An Inspector had examined the boilers of the boat not long before and given a certificate that they were strong and in good order. Now the boat has been fished up from the bottom of the bay and the boilers examined by skilled men; it is found that they were utterly unfit for the use they were put to and the explosion and consequent destruction of human life, and all the misery that followed were mere matters of course. Men with the greed of the grave and as conscienceless as Satan get control of the machinery of politics in order that the may be enabled to rob without fear of the penitentiary. They provide for their tools by putting them in positions for which they have not the slightest qualification, and the lives and property of the people suffer in consequence. There is need for reform in the management of parties.

Senator Stewart, of Nevada, is working hard to effect a change in the law so that silver bullion could be deposited at any United States Mint and the depositor receive a certificate of deposit for his silver at its market value at the time of deposit. The effect of such a law would be to cause an immediate rise in the price of silver; and such rise would continue till the former ratio of silver to gold should again be established. This would in turn lead to decreased purchasing power for gold and for that reason the change will be opposed bitterly by the bond holders. There can be little doubt that the change would be of benefit to every one engaged in farming and manufacturing of all kinds, as well as to miners. The greatest good of the greatest number theory is in accord with the proposed change in the law. If Mr. Stewart fails to have his measure become law it will not be for want of plenty of hard work on his part.

A report comes from Washington on what appears to be good authority that Leland Stanford will be a candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency. No American in recent years has more rapidly grown in the esteem and confidence of his countrymen than Mr. Stanford. It is only very lately that the real character of the man began to be understood. Instead of being the selfish and grasping accumulator of wealth he was so long represented to be it is now seen that he regards his vast possessions merely as a public trust, to be used and invested for the good of his fellow citizens. He has also given proof that he has the wisdom and knowledge to apply this vast wealth where it will do the greatest good to the greatest number. Mr. Stanford would make not only a good, but a grand chief magistate.

Through the ignorance of a rascal who by some hocus pocus got possession of a diploma and practiced as a physician, the lives of the people of Virginia City, and of all who have business or correspondence there have been put in jeopardy. This Doctor Zengerle did not know whether a case he was called to treat was scarletina, or chicken pox, or "swine-pox," whatever that may be, or what it was, till a competent physician was called, who at once saw that it was the terrible small-pox. No punishment could be too severe for the scoundrels who by perjury, bribery, and sometimes forgery get possession of diplomas under cover of which they commit deeds that are little short of murder.

Certain Custom Officers at San Francisco have been doing a thriving business in Chinese certificates of return. These documents were made out in San Francisco by the hundreds and sent to a confederate, who went to China for the purpose of receiving them. The proceeds of the sales were divided among the confederates. The Federal Judges at San Francisco have no doubt admitted many Chinamen on these forged certificates. The abuse of Federal authority in this matter of admitting Chinese is working great injury to California.

China appears to be afflicted with the most terrible catastrophes known to modern times. Not long since an inundation swept away as many human beings as may have perished when Noah was in command of the only vessel afloat. Later an earthquake is reported in which 15,000 people perished in four days. The dense population of China causes these convulsions of nature to be more destructive of life there than would be the case in any other part of the world.

The Democratic State Convention is to be held at Los Angeles. During the past year or two the republicans have made such large gains in the southern counties that the former democratic majorities are in danger of disappearing entirely. It is expected that the party will be strengthened by holding the Convention in Los Angeles this year.

THE GINSENG TRADE.

A SUPERSTITION WHICH COSTS A MILLION DOLLARS YEARLY.

A Universal Chinese Medicine of No Value to Caucasians—A Strange Article of Traffic—A Priest's Discovery—The American Plant.

One of the mysteries in the world of commerce is ginseng. If you speak to an ordinary man about ginseng, he will ask you what you mean. If you tell him that ginseng is an article of commerce in which a traffic of about $1,000,000 a year is done by Americans, he will stare at you. If you tell him that it has been in certain places of the world worth its weight in gold, he will probably stare harder. If, in addition to this, you tell him that it is a vast humbug, and that it is a very ordinary root of an American shrub, almost without a particle of any but imaginary value, he will concede that it is a strange article for traffic. Finally, when he learns that the populace of a vast nation, high and low, consider it a cureall, and that it enters into every medicine for every ailment in that nation, he will only understand the matter when he learns that it is the eccentric Chinese to whom this in reality unimportant root is valuable.

WHAT IS IT GOOD FOR.

Physicians and authorities of the civilized world give the assurance that in medicinal properties the root is almost inert, at the most contains to a very mild extent tonic properties. None but the singular and rice eating Celestial can feel any effects from the use of it; but among the Chinamen of this country there is almost no consumption. The root is bought here by resident Chinamen for home export. They do not use it themselves, however, and inquiry from these Celestial worthies has seldom brought out any satisfactory statements as to what ginseng is good for.

The belief among the home Chinese is mostly superstition. It is sort of fetish; its powers are supposed to be occult, of the nature of magic. It is believed to have a mysterious and powerful effect on the fecundative powers and to be infallible in cases of barrenness. This is its primary importance, and occasionally Caucasians have attempted to test its value in this direction, but satisfactory results are wanting. In China the belief is still implicit, and besides the vast amount grown in that country, it receives all that America can supply, which is on the average 425,000 pounds a year. The American wholesale price is now $2.25 a pound.

Ginseng, in China, is a government monopoly, and Professor Lockhart, of London, is the authority for the statement that it is sold to privileged dealers by the imperial government of China at its weight in gold. This is denied by some American dealers. But the value is still high.

There are certain single roots, especially of certain shapes, very rare, which bring from $25 to $400, and are only possessed by the wealthy class—mandarins and others.

Ginseng from Manchuria was once valued above all other varieties, and imperial edict prohibited its collection, because the enormous export was reducing it to scarcity. Ginseng in this country is limited. Only 400,000 or 500,000 pounds of it can be collected in one year. Its price here is enormous, and even ludicrous, when the worthlessness of the article is considered. Of the root, although light, it only requires a hatful to make a pound. And yet the wholesale price here is slowly, but always steadily, rising, and the ridiculous fact is before us that the price of this futile drug, used by nobody in this country, will in time become greater than that of opium itself, as the gradual but sure process of its extermination in America continues.

FATHER FASTOUX'S DISCOVERY.

It happened that in 1709, a Jewish priest, one Father F. Fastoux, was diligently employed in making a map of Tartary. During this labor he saw the plant growing in its mystic land, four leagues away from the kingdom of Corea, in the spot where a Tartar village lay. The Tartars were full of the praise of the fabulous ginseng and its wonderful powers. Good Father Fastoux became an enthusiast also. He had missionary friends on the other side of the world in Canada. To these the priest sent some of the root and an extolment of its properties as a cure for all human ills. Back in due time came the reply that the same root was well known to the Canada priests and in full use by the Indians. The American ginseng perhaps differs slightly from the Chinese, for there are five or six varieties of the root, but it possesses all the external attributes of the celestial variety.

The ginseng was sent at that time to Europe, and was then first introduced to the civilized world; even at that date, in the last century, European savants rudely shattered the illusion as to the root, and pronounced it almost inert as a drug. This did not affect its value to the Mongol races. Long afterward, as it was discovered over the regions of North America, the idea of its export arose. It grows about the wild lands and farms of the northwest and northeast. As cultivation ruins its flavor it cannot be made a regular industry, either in growth or collection. The biggest yield of all was 1861, when the export almost doubled; 1860 had seen a ginseng collecting craze, like a gold fever, in the lake states, where the people left their homes, camped for weeks in the hills, raised the export of ginseng to 633,000 pounds—the highest export ever made—and rooted out the plant so that it has been scarce ever since.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Qualities of the Centenarian.

An English physician who has investigated the characteristics and surroundings of centenarians says he finds that the average qualities were a good family history, a well made frame of average stature, spare rather than stout, robust, with good health, appetite and digestion, capable of exertion, good sleepers, of placid temperament and good intelligence, very little need for and little consumption of alcohol and animal food. The man who aspires to be a centenarian should therefore fit himself out with these qualifications.—Chicago News.

Natural Shades of Silk.

During the past two seasons Mr. E. B. Poulton has made observations which prove that the silk of at least three species of English moths is greatly affected in color by environment at the time of spinning. The cocoons were dark brown when the larvæ had been placed in a black bag or among green leaves, and white when they had been freely exposed to light in the immediate neighborhood of white surfaces.—Arkansaw Traveler.

What It Shows.

The fact that 1,500 fires out of 2,415, which occurred in New York city last year, were extinguished by buckets of water, shows the good resulting from watchfulness on the part of owners and tenants of property, employes of stores and manufacturing establishments. It also illustrates the propriety of keeping buckets full of water always at hand in the latter places.—United States Review.

It has been calculated, according to Professor Proctor, that a man of 70 has consumed twenty wagon loads, or eighty tons, of food, solid and liquid.

TAKE SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

For all Diseases of the

Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Spleen.

This purely vegetable preparation, now so celebrated as a Family Medicine, originated in the South in 1828. It acts gently on the Bowels and Kidneys and corrects the action of the Liver, and is, therefore, the best preparatory medicine, whatever the sickness may prove to be. In all common diseases it will, unassisted by any other medicine, effect a speedy cure.

The Regulator is safe to administer in any condition of the system, and under no circumstances can it do harm. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage to lead to intemperance; will promote digestion, dissipate headache, and generally tone up the system. The dose is small, not unpleasant, and its virtues undoubted.

No loss of time, no interruption or stoppage of business while taking the Regulator.

Children complaining of Colic, Headache, or Sick Stomach, a teaspoonful or more will give relief.

If taken occasionally by patients exposed to MALARIA, will expel the poison and protect them from attack.

A PHYSICIANS OPINION.

I have been practicing medicine for twenty years, and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Simmons Liver Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid (instead of weakening) the digestive and assimilative powers of the system. Last week a man named Morris Ladd died a horrible death at San Jose. The Enterprise says: "At eight o'clock yesterday morning [Saturday] James Cavanagh was literally filled with fragments of rock from the premature explosion of a blast in the Hale & Norcross mine." It is believed that he will recover and be all right again. Over two years ago John Cavanagh, brother to James, was killed in the same mine.

In the matter of the Campbell property, at Big Pine: The Executors of the will proposed to lease the property. This was opposed by the guardian of the heir of D. Campbell, deceased. The Crocker Brothers, at Big Pine, are to have the property for one year.

The photograph gallery at Independence will close on Monday. All who want work will please call not later than Monday at 1 o'clock p. m. The gallery will be opened at Lone Pine on Tuesday and at Keeler by the end of the week.

J. H. CROCKWELL.

Sober Second Though.

The people of Mono county realize that it was a mistake to pass the cattle and horse license ordinance, and now want to have it repealed. The Chronicle-Union says:

The "sober second thought" of the people of Mono county demands that the Cattle and Horse Ordinance be "expunged," and, if the Supervisors are wise, it will be. At the time of its passage many favored who now oppose it. It was an afterthought this tacking a cattle and horse license on to the sheep ordinance. Before the Supreme Court decided that the sheep license was constitutional, all were content to leave it as it was, but as soon as the case was decided in favor of the county it was thought best to tax all stock, consequently the ordinance to that effect was passed. But, after taking into consideration all its points, it is found to be antagonistic to the best interests of the county, so far as levying a tax upon the cattle and horse industry of this county. There is not another county in California that has such a suicidal law on its books. It should be the other way--every encouragement should be given to the raising of cattle and horses, for at this time it looks as though we must depend upon that class to keep the county government in motion, therefore it should not be crippled by unwise legislation, and onerous taxation.

Died of Starvation.

It is reported that the widow of Conrad Wiegand, well known in Virginia City in former years, and her sister died last week of starvation. Mrs. Wiegand and three unmarried sisters named Aaron, lived together at Mount Holly, New Jersey. They owned a nice dwelling but no other property and were in utterly destitute circumstances. None of their neighbors knew of their condition as they were of too sensitive and retiring disposition to speak of their want. One of the sisters died of starvation and then the truth became known. Relief in plenty was furnished at once, but it came too late. Mrs. Wiegand was the next to die and it was expected that the two remaining sisters would soon follow. All the ladies had been noted for good deeds in times when they were prosperous. In the flush times of Virginia City Conrad Wiegand might easily have made a large fortune.

Benifit of Artesian Wells.

Describing the artesian wells of Tulare county the Record-Union says: "Lying directly west of the town [Tulare City] is the artesian district. Here at a depth of from 300 to 700 feet is tapped a water bearing strata that gives continuous flow of pure, clear water, and in quantity sufficient to irrigate from 160 to 640 acres of any kind of fruit. The cost of these wells complete averages about $1,200. Principal among the many advantages of artesian water for irrigation is the fact that it is always at hand when needed, does not scatter the seed of injurious plants upon the land, is not subject to assessments, has no riparian owner below nor prior appropriation above, and is not subject to litigation as ditch interests sometimes are. With one of these wells and a small parcel of land the owner is practically independent."

Long Tailed Delinquency.

In the year 1876 a tract of land containing 400 acres, five miles from Independence was sold to the State for delinquent tax. The amount of the tax was $80; the land was patented, but at that time land in Owens Valley was so little valued that no one would buy it for the tax when the Sheriff offered it for sale. The tract, having been sold to the State, was neglected and remained unnoticed until a few days ago, when a San Francisco attorney made inquiry as to the amount of tax that would now be due. He was informed that the amount is $330.44 and this will be paid immediately. The title to this tract once vested with the late Frank McCrellish, of San Francisco. The increase in value of land in Owens Valley is causing a sharper lookout after all tracts where there is any color of title to the land.

Irrigation Election.

Last Wednesday an election should have been held for officers for the irrigation district formed last year; but if such an election was held no one appears to know anything about it. No report has been made so far of voting places being opened, or of any one appearing to vote. Section IV of the act under which irrigation districts may be formed reads as follows: "An election shall be held in such district on the first Wednesday in April, eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, and on the first Wednesday in April in each second year thereafter, at which an Assessor, Collector and Treasurer and a Board of five Directors for the district shall be elected." Here was an enterprise that promised at one time to be of great value to the county; but the life appears to have been choked out of it; or if it has any vitality left it is not apparent.

Too Late

A few days ago a man was at Independence who has lived ten years in Owens Valley. He has about fourteen horses, wagons, farming implements and all else necessary for working a farm. During all these years this man has been renting land, and to-day does not own an acre. At last it occurred to him that he might as well own some land and started out to find a tract that would suit him for locating. Only then did he discover that he was too late; he could not find a tract of land worth having but what was already located. Now he curses his own want of common sense, and wishes vainly that he had made a location when he had thousands of acres of the best land in the valley to choose from.

Photographs.

During his stay at Independence Mr. J. H. Crockwell, the photographer, did a large business. His pictures are all in the best style of the art and bear favorable comparison with pictures taken in San Francisco and other large cities. He has taken a large number of views of buildings in town and of the mountains in the neighborhood; these mountain views are very fine and will give a far better idea of the grandeur of our mountains than any description in words.

Ladies and Misses Spring hats, trimmed and untrimmed, at Rhines.

Give the Trout a Chance.

On every stream in the valley coming down from the Sierra Nevadas trout fishing is now eagerly pursued. A very large proportion of the fish caught are females full of spawn. To kill such trout now is to risk exterminating the breed in all of the streams. It would be much better to have the law changed so that the close season would be extended a month, or even six weeks. But when such a change is proposed in the Legislature a majority of the members oppose it because the spawning season is earlier on the other side of the mountains. We cannot have a special law that would fit our side of the mountains, for that the Constitution forbids. No way of protecting the fish remains but to appeal to the good sense of the people themselves. Surely no one would want to exterminate the trout from the streams; and few can be so stupid as not to know that if the present course is pursued only a few seasons longer few, if any, trout will remain. All sensible people should lend their influence to restrain the young and thoughtless from fishing before the first of May at the earliest, and two weeks later would be better. By that time the creeks would be well stocked with spawn, ensuring an abundance of trout and plenty of sport for other seasons. Then, too, the pleasure of fishing would be far greater than at present. The groves along the streams would be in bloom, affording delightful shade where bottled bait could be enjoyed, and where fragrant incense of Havana offered to the spirit of the place would linger among the leaves overhead. Let us go catfishing for a month hence and give the trout a chance to deposit their spawn.

The Supervisors have power to pass an ordinance continuing the close season for trout fishing to a later period than the first of April. In fact the Board might protract the close season to whatever time they thought best. But as the next regular meeting of the Board will be held in May, and an ordinance, if adopted, could not go into effect for several weeks longer, the only protection to the fish this year must come from the good sense of the people themselves. As it is not at all likely that the Supervisors would pass such an ordinance without first having some expression of public opinion on the subject, all who care anything about the protection of the trout should at once set about getting up petitions to be presented to the Board, asking them to change the close season.

Prohibition Club.

A prohibition club has been formed at Bishop Creek, eighteen members signing the roll at the first meeting. Thomas McLeod is President and Rev. C. L. Logan Secretary. Rev. T. E. Sisson was chosen a delegate to a State Convention to be held at San Francisco, J. L. Bourland alternate. There are many men in the liquor business who would be glad to see total prohibition established as the law of the land if it would accomplish total prohibition. Many men are selling liquor, not from choice, but through seeming necessity; they would be glad to get out of the business but don't see any other way to make a living; all these would be glad to have the business stopped entirely and then something else would turn up for them.

At the present low price for borax the profit on the article mined in Death Valley must be very small. It has to be hauled one hundred and sixty miles through a desert country where every article needed by men and animals is very costly; and where high wages must be paid to workmen. The owners of the borax beds have a very large capital invested, and the region has no other resource than this. To put borax on the free list would put a stop to the work in Death Valley; the amount of capital would be lost and Inyo county would lose the amount of tax now paid on the property.

A meeting of the American party was held at Independence last Monday evening. Five persons were present, namely, A. J. Davis, Peter Laird, Henry Malone, S. G. Gregg and C. F. Fuller. Mr. Davis was elected President, Mr. Fuller, Secretary, and Mr. Malone, Treasurer. It was determined to call a county convention and nominate candidates for county offices.

It was proposed to hold a meeting of Republicans at the Courthouse on last Wednesday evening for the purpose of organizing a campaign club. The only persons who attended the meeting were Messrs. S. D. Thurston and A. R. Conklin. The result of the meeting has not been made public.

The pupils of the Camp Independence school will give a pic-nic at the Post on the first Saturday in May under the supervision of Mr. D. Crouch, teacher. All sorts of amusements will be provided; the public generally is cordially invited to participate.

FOREIGN GOSSIP.

—Thousands of new policemen's clubs have lately been made for the London police.

—In Turkey when any man is the author of notorious falsehoods they blacken the whole front of his house.

—Several German firms have given notice to houses in Bradford, where there are many Germans, that they will adopt Volapuk in corresponding with English manufacturers.

—The City of Mexico levies a tax on bull fights of fifteen per cent. of the gross receipts, and thus far this season the city treasury has been enriched forty thousand dollars from this source.

—The petroleum deposits recently discovered in Burmah are said by the English papers to be practically inexhaustible, and they express the opinion that England will soon draw her supplies of oil from that source instead of the United States.

—A Paris rag-picker who had been sentenced to one month's imprisonment for vagabondage, turned toward his counsel and contemptuously called him a "cow." For this little exhibition of temper he was given an extra term of two years.

—The Government of Denmark will expend twenty thousand dollars in a coast survey of Iceland, to be commenced next summer. The depths and channels of many of the great bays and inlets are inaccurately known, and it is anticipated that the work will also promote the Icelandic fisheries as well as the interest of navigators.

—While the Queen's hounds recently were chasing a deer in England, the animal took to the railroad track, and presently rounded a curve right in the face of an express going forty-five miles an hour. The deer swerved in time to save its life, but the pack following close behind ran square into the locomotive, and several of them were cut to pieces.

—A Liverpool dealer in wild animals of various kinds has recently shipped 120 ferrets to a sheep farmer in New Zealand, whose pastures are being ruined by rabbits. Curiously enough, the same dealer has an order from British Columbia for 2,000 rabbits. But they are not likely to prove the nuisance there that they have in Australia and New Zealand.

—The people of Japan have made voluntary subscriptions of $2,100,000, some $600,000 more than was desired, to the coast-defense fund. The sum in excess of that called for will be used in the manufacture of cannon, that industry having been recently established in Japan, at the Osaka arsenal. They are already experimenting with the new Italian composition metal in casting guns.

—A Postage Stamp Exchange and Mart is shortly to be opened in Vienna. The Austrian post-office sells annually 8,000 florins' worth of stamps out of use to collectors. No less than 50,000 florins' worth of Eastern postage stamps are exported every year from Vienna. Cards of admission to the Postage Stamp Exchange will on no conditions be delivered to collectors under eighteen years of age.

—The question as to the best width for wagon tires on vehicles used for the transportation of heavy loads over dirt roads and farm fields, has become a subject of scientific investigation. As the density and hardness of the earth over which the tires are to roll enter largely into the problem, it will take a wide range of experiments to enable investigators to fix upon that precise width of tire which will be most uniformly advantageous on all the varieties of dirt roads and farm soils. But that the tires should be much wider than those in general use seems to be conceded on all sides.—N. Y. Ledger.

HOLDING A LUCKY NUMBER.

Enables a Good Man to Materially Increase His Stock.

On Main street, Petaluma, opposite Odd Fellows' Block, a quiet, unpretentious gentleman merchant has for years passed the even tenor of his way—slowly but surely adding a little to his wealth from year to year. Learning that he was the lucky holder of one-tenth of ticket No. 33,442, which drew the first capital prize of 150,000 in the January drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery, we interviewed him on Wednesday last, to see what effect his suddenly acquired wealth would have on him.

We asked him if it was true that he had been paid the $15,000. He replied: "Yes, sir. Don't this look like it?" pointing to some large boxes of dry goods that he was assisting to unpack.

"Well, Mr. Schmidt, is there any danger of this suddenly acquired wealth turning your head?"

"No, sir. It might have made a fool of me if it had happened when I was a good deal younger than I am now. You see that I am using this money to increase my business, and the lucky turn was not only a great help to me, but it is a help to this community, in that it enables me to buy goods lower than before, by paying cash, and in this way it helps other people, for I will be able to sell goods a little cheaper."

"Do you patronize this Lottery as a regular business, Mr. Schmidt?"

"Oh, no. I buy a ticket occasionally. That man"—pointing to one who is in business nearly opposite him,—"rather forced the ticket upon me. It was nearly time for the drawing to take place, and he had more tickets than he wished to carry, and to accommodate him I took the tickets. So far as I can learn, this was the only ticket in town that drew anything that month.

This is the first big haul that any of our people have made in the Louisiana State Lottery, and we are certainly glad that it happened in this instance, for it greatly assisted a deserving, honest man.—Petaluma (Cal.) Argus, Feb. 4.

PINCHING PARSIMONY.

Why It Looks Out of Place in These Days of General Prosperity.

It is well and right to be economical, for economy is at the base of saving and comfort and independence. Many a housewife has wasted the substance of her husband's earnings, and many another one has been the means of enabling him, perhaps forcing him, to lay up something for a rainy day. The pride of the thrifty housewife who boasts that nothing is lost under her administration of domestic expenditure and consumption, is familiar to all. Every scrap and shred is utilized by her, and she rivals the inventiveness of manufacturers in converting wastes into serviceable use. Poor, hard-working men owe it to their wives' economy that their little homes are their own; while others struggle along hopelessly in the effort to get a home, against the extravagance of their wives.

But economy is not pinching parsimony. Make no mistake about this. The good housewife who is doing her best to make both ends meet, and, if possible, to save a little, out of her husband's earnings, is not to be confounded with the one who is endeavoring to pinch something out of the existence of her family and herself. The one will keep her family well, but will not waste; the other will try to prevent goodness from going into life.

An old man worth $50,000 was declining in weakness to the grave and had been ordered by his physician to take a little wine. "This is rich living for me," he said, regretfully, as he was sipping the wine and eating a cracker; and he made sure that not a drop remained in the glass, to be lost. Here was an economical spirit turned into parsimony; and a life that had been industrious and useful, was no doubt prematurely ended by its pinching character.

Savings made at the expense of starving the body and mind are too dearly bought. They may be of service to children and their posterity, but the sacrifice that creates them has no defense.

There was a time when parsimony did not look as bad as it now does. It had almost an excuse in a day of scarcity and poverty, of high prices and small earnings. But the people who need to resort to absolute parsimony nowadays are few, and those people are usually the most wasteful and, considering their means, the most extravagant. The day of comfort and luxury has come to most people who will avail themselves of it.

A pinched-up existence is hardly an apology for keeping soul and body together, and a person who pinches his body and soul not only acts like a trespasser upon the domain of life, but by his conduct endeavors to make himself a trespasser.—Good Housekeeping.

PEARL OYSTERS.

The Manner in Which They Produce Their Recondite Treasures.

The business of getting pearls out of oysters is a tolerably disagreeable one. The oysters are thrown into large vessels and left to die, when the shells open of their own accord. The shells are then removed, but the oysters themselves are left in buckets until they are decomposed, when they are well stirred. The pearls sink to the bottom, and the remainder is poured off. It may be readily inferred that the odor in the camp of pearl-seekers is more powerful than pleasant.

The pearl had its origin in the efforts of the oyster to protect itself from the irritation caused by the presence of some foreign body between the shell and its mantle, as the soft skin of the oyster is technically termed. To mitigate the suffering caused by this vexatious intruder, the oyster deposits thereon a coating of the same material as that of which the shell is composed, and when once this process has begun it continues till in time the pearl grows large enough to kill the oyster.

To fanciful minds of Oriental nations no such crude explanation has ever occurred, and they still attribute to pearls much more poetic origin. The oysters, they say, rise by night to the surface of the water, and opening their shells receive therein a single drop of dew. This in time becomes a pearl, and if the dew has been pure and clear the pearl will be a beautiful one; but if the drop of dew has been soiled with impurities then the pearl will be opaque and of no value.

Linnæus, the "father of naturalists," received the honor of knighthood for demonstrating the possibility of artificially inducing the formation of pearls in the pearl-bearing mussel. But, as has been the case with other European inventions of which we have thought a good deal, it has since turned out that John Chinaman has been doing this thing for a couple of thousand years or so. The Chinese method is to take the mussel from the river, carefully force the shells a little way apart, and insert between the mantle of the oyster and one of the shells a few little pellets of clay, tiny pearls or foreign bodies of some kind. When this has been done, the oyster is turned over, and the poor fellow is obliged to submit to a similar uncomfortable process on his other side. He is then put back into a pond, where he is kept well and fat by a diet more nourishing than nice. After a few months, or sometimes a year or two, he is again taken from his bed, his pearls are taken out and he is eaten.—Cor. Boston Herald.

—One of the simplest of barometers is a spider web. When there is prospect of rain or wind the spider shortens the filaments from which its web is suspended, and leaves things in this state as long as the weather is variable. If the insect elongates its thread it is a sign of fine, calm weather, the duration of which may be judged of by the length to which the threads are let out. If the spider remains inactive it is a sign of rain; but if, on the contrary, it keeps at work during the rain the latter will not last long, and will be followed by fine weather. Other observations have taught that the spider makes changes in its web every twenty-four hours, and that if such changes are made in the evening, just before sunset, the night will be clear and beautiful.—La Nature.

YOU.

If I could have my dearest wish fulfilled,
And take my choice of all earth's treasures, too:
And ask from Heaven whatsoe'er I willed,
I'd ask for you.

No man I'd envy, neither low nor high,
Nor king in castle old or palace new:
I'd hold Golconda's mines less rich than I,
If I had you.

Toil and privation, poverty and care,
Undaunted I'd defy, nor fortune woo.
Having my wife, no jewels else I'd wear,
If she were you.

Little I'd care how lovely she might be,
How graced with every charm, how fond, how true,
E'en though perfection she'd be nought to me
Were she not you.

There is more charm for my true, loving heart
In every thing you think, or say, or do.
Than all the joys of Heaven could e'er impart,
Because it's you.

DECEIVING DOCTORS.

The Mendacity of Opium Slaves and the Hypocrisy of Topers.

The habit of taking opium or its preparations is very widely diffused. One effect of the opium (or morphine) habit is to extinguish any regard for truth the victim may have previously possessed. It is a rule, with only the rarest exceptions, that every opium-eater will stop at no falsehood in order to secure the potent drug. It often happens that an attempt is made to reform. At first the desire to discontinue the habit is usually genuine. Soon, however, the mental and physical pains which arise in the absence of the drug call imperatively for opium, which alone can relieve the terrible craving. The opium victim soon learns that this drug is the great antidote to pain, and that most cough syrups contain it. Hence the deception of the physician when he is called to a case of this sort, one who is pretending to reform, but who wants some sanction for his breaking his pledge. He will therefore simulate a severe cough or an atrocious pain along the course of some nerve, or some deep-seated pain that gives no evidence of its presence except the suffering it inflicts upon the patient. When the symptoms are purely "subjective" (that is, giving no evidence of their presence except the statement of the patient) the chances of the deception succeeding are very numerous. A knowledge of the habits of the patient is essential if this source of mistakes is to be avoided. In hospitals and dispensaries there is a constant demand for "cough mixtures," because these are expected to contain opium in some form.

The alcohol habit is the foundation of numberless deceptions. Attempts are made to deceive the physician long after such tricks have been detected by the family and friends. The deception sometimes extends still further, for the patient himself sometimes deceives himself. Some time since the writer met a man who showed all the signs of long-continued alcoholism—a typical case. This man stated he was strictly temperate, never entered a saloon or imbibed any intoxicant. He admitted that he could not eat breakfast or other meal without a dose of "——'s stomach bitters," and that he had a cord of the empty bottles in his cellar. In hospitals there is a constant petition from some of the inmates for "bitters" of some kind, as these preparations mostly contain alcohol. The alcohol is frequently added to preserve the vegetable extracts from fermentation, but in the so-called "temperance drinks" the essential constituent is alcohol, while the vegetable bitter is added in order to deceive.

The doctor is seldom the victim of deception like this, but in cases of ladies who are the subjects of alcoholism it is not always easy to learn the means adopted to secure the necessary intoxicants. The concealed source of intoxication is occasionally found to be the cologne water bottle or other preparation of diluted alcohol scented with essential oils. At other times it is a confidential servant, who brings in the daily supply of the ordinary intoxicant for a consideration. Such cases of deception are often very difficult to detect. The dread of having to give up a habit which has become part and parcel of the individual is a strong motive for such concealment. In the case of young men, whose positions in business depend upon sobriety, along with other substantial qualities, there are the strongest possible motives for concealing the cause of headache, nervousness, disturbance of the stomach, etc., following the excessive use of alcohol. Of course, it is foolishness itself to attempt to deceive the physician who is asked for relief of these symptoms, still the attempt is often made, with the hope that the doctor can cure the after effects without knowing the cause. As a matter of fact, such a plan never succeeds, unless it is a fledgling from one of the numerous diploma mills to be found in every city. In other words, the competent physician is always able to recognize such cases, whatever devices may be adopted to conceal the true state of affairs.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The bard was asked to compose a little poem upon his childhood, and this is what he produced: "How dear to my heart is the school I attended, and how I remember, so distant and dim, that red headed Bill and the pin that I bended, and carefully put on the bench under him. And how I recall the surprise of the master, when Bill gave a yell and sprang up from the pin so high that his bullet head smashed up the plaster above, and the scholars all set up a din. The active boy Billy, that high leaping Billy, that loud shouting Billy who sat on a pin."—Toledo Blade.

Why She Sat Down.

This morning a young lady was passing a residence on whose steps was a young man, and in front of which was a dog. In a flash her feet went out from under her and she went down on the icy walk. The dog in a playful mood rushed to her assistance, while the young man, not at all embarrassed, asked:

"Did you fall?"

"Well, I should think I had," said the young lady, rising and rearranging her head gear.

"Yes," responded the youth, "I thought it must be funny if you sat down to play with the dog."—Albany Journal.

Served Hot.

"Madam," pleaded the tramp, piteously, "I am hungry to starving. May I take a few snowballs to eat from your side yard?"

"Certainly, my poor man," replied the woman with the big heart, kindly, "and if you like I'll warm them up for you."—New York Sun.

A REPRIEVE FOR THE CONDEMNED.

Wretched men and women long condemned to suffer the tortures of dyspepsia, are filled with new hope after a few doses of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This budding hope blossoms into the fruition of certainty, if the Bitters is persisted in. It brings a reprieve to all dyspeptics who seek its aid. Flatulence, heartburn, sinking at the pit of the stomach between meals, the nervous tremors and insomnia of which chronic indigestion is the parent, disappear with their hateful progenitor. Most beneficent of stomachics! who can wonder that in so many instances it awakens grateful eloquence in those who, benefitted by it, speak voluntarily in its behalf. It requires a graphic pen to describe the torments of dyspepsia, but in many of the testimonials received by the proprietors of the Bitters, these are portrayed with vivid truthfulness. Constipation, biliousness, nuscular debility, malarial fevers and rheumatism are relieved by it.

A BLOODY AFFRAY

is often the result of "bad blood" in a family or community, but nowhere is bad blood more destructive of happiness and health than in the human system. When the life current is foul and sluggish with impurities, and is slowly distributing its poisons to every part of the body, the peril to health, and life even, is imminent. Early symptoms are dull and drowsy feelings, severe headaches, coated tongue, poor appetite, indigestion and general lassitude. Delay in treatment may entail the most serious consequences. Don't let disease get a strong hold on your constitution, but treat yourself by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and be restored to the blessings of health. All druggists.

JENKS' DREAM.

Jenks had a queer dream the other night. He thought he saw a prize-fighters' ring, and in the middle of it stood a doughty little champion who met and deliberately knocked over, one by one, a score or more of big, burly-looking fellows, as they advanced to the attack. Giants as they were in size, the valiant pigmy proved more than a match for them. It was all so funny that Jenks woke up laughing. He accounts for the dream by the fact that he had just come to the conclusion, after trying nearly every big, drastic pill on the market, that Pierce's Tiny Purgative Pellets easily "knock out" and beat all the rest hollow!

Have just used your CUTICURA REMEDIES on one of my girls, and found it to be just what it is recommended to be. My daughter was all broken out on her head and body, and the hair commenced to come out. Now she is as smooth as ever she was, and she has only used one box of CUTICURA, one cake of CUTICURA SOAP, and one bottle of CUTICURA RESOLVENT. I doctored with quite a number of doctors, but to no avail. I am willing to make affidavit to the truth of the statement.

GENUINE HYDROPHOBIA.

An Article Which Should Find a Place in Every Family Scrap-Book.

Did you see what that patient did when I offered him a glass of water? He turned from it with fear and distress. The offer was not so cruel as it seemed, as he had been able to swallow a little water in the house. That has given the name to the disease, hydrophobia. He wants water, he craves water, yet he fears it. When he was coming down here, in his suffering, he grasped a handful of snow, which was to him, doubtless, one of the rarest treats which he has enjoyed for some time. This is undoubtedly hydrophobia. A strong, substantial farmer, fifty-two years old, who never knew what hysteria was, nor nervous disease, is rather too old to pick it up now. His pet spaniel, of which he was very fond, had strayed from home—an unusual thing for it to do. Then, in a season of sanity, which these dogs sometimes have, returned to his master, who rejoiced at the finding of his pet, was fondling him; and the dog, with those tokens of affection common to them, struck his teeth against the lips of his master, and inflicted the wound which will soon cause his death. The injury was not on the part of the body covered with clothes, where the poison might have been wiped away, but on the bare lip. Sixty per cent. of bites on the face prove fatal; forty per cent. of those on the hand, and only from twenty to thirty per cent. of those occurring on parts covered by the clothing. The exciting cause of this attack may be a sudden noise, a slam of the door or any sudden impression. In this case it was an appeal to the senses, and that of smell was the one selected. He was butchering hogs forty-five days after the reception of the injury and inhaled some irritating vapor. He was attacked with dyspnœa. An officious neighbor told him that hydrophobia commenced so. This was a most unfortunate occurrence. Fear has much to do with the aggravation of the disease. Men have had what appeared to be a sure case, and were relieved after seeing the dog in health, and thus being made to know that he was not mad, as they had feared. You can not deceive this man. All our efforts in this line have been fruitless. He knows that he has hydrophobia, and knows he will die.

The chain of evidence in this case is very complete. The dog lived a few days afterwards, and died with hydrophobic symptoms. It is of great importance, in all suspected cases, to keep the dog, and watch it closely. It was not known where this dog got hydrophobia. It was not known that there were mad dogs about. Rabies is not confided to dogs, but is also found among cats, foxes and other animals. The history is quite enough in this case to support the diagnosis. The history of the bite was obtained here; but this is apt to be forgotten, especially in this country. Some sudden impression may start it up.

It is very essential to follow up the history of the animal. Hammond reports a case in which a man died and the dog did not bite him at all. The period of incubation is not so long in any disease as in hydrophobia. It varies between eighteen and sixty-four days. This case is about an average. Cases do occur in three, six, twelve and twenty-four months. In the older literature, we have statements of its happening after five to ten years, but we look on these statements with incredulity. We know how a man can inhale the micro-organisms of tuberculosis, which will lie latent for a long time, then assert itself. The fact that the period of incubation is so long gives great encouragement in preventive treatment. We can cut out the wound, suck out the poison, or apply the ligature if properly located. There is nothing better than fire. Heat an iron white hot and apply it to the surface of the wound. Thorough destruction of the wound is the only hope. We must at all events cauterize the wound; lunar caustic is poor, chloride of zinc is better, fire is the best. Destroy the wound at once; but do not fail to do so if as much as two weeks have elapsed. Pasteur thought he could make the victim used to an attenuated form of virus, and thus keep the disease in check. Pasteur's treatment may prove useful. It is too early as yet to tell what will become of it.

Patients attacked with this disease die in from two to eight days. This man looks as if he would die in twenty-four hours. We can only prove beyond a possible doubt that a case is hydrophobia by inoculation. It is doubtful if a true case of hydrophobia ever recovered.

We can relieve symptoms. This man has received forty grains of chloral by the rectum, then one-half grain of morphia hypodermically; one-half hour later, one-third grain of morphia hypodermically, then five grains of chloral hypodermically, all of which was followed by no effect worth speaking of. This morning one grain of coacine was put in the œsophagus and throat, then one-third grain of curare. Moerck's preparation was given subcutaneously, which should be repeated every half hour till the dyspnœa is relieved. All the tact of the physician is needed to take the fear from the patient. He should be kept quiet; only those necessarily engaged in attending him should be left about him. Put him in a bed, hung around with curtains, so as to exclude the sounds and light. This, it is said, will retard the convulsions, but does not stop the advance of death. Euthanasia, happy death, is all that we can hope to secure in this case.—Report of a Lecture by Dr. J. T. Whittaker, in Medical and Surgical Reporter.

HUNTING WEAPONS.

Some Valuable Suggestions From an Expert as to Their Proper Care.

"Just go up that dark stairway in the rear of the building, and you will find our gunsmith, who can tell you what you want to know," said Mr. Joseph Beck to an excited young man who had in his hand a double-barrel shot-gun with a hole in the right side near the muzzle.

At the head of the stairway there was one long room filled with vises and lathes and benches around the sides, while peculiar old guns and strange tools were scattered here and there.

"Ah, ha, you have had a wad in that barrel," said the old smith, as he looked over his glasses at the gun. "A thin paper wad, affording only the resistance necessary to hold it in the barrel, will burst a gun if the wad is at the muzzle. A rim of dirt will prove equally effective in destroying a gun, and for that reason one should never put the muzzle of his gun on the soft earth, as some sportsmen do in climbing a fence or passing an obstruction. To eighteen inches above the butt a barrel is built to withstand a lateral resistance. The remainder of the barrel might as well be made of tin. All it does is to retain the direction of the discharge. This is true of all guns. Last summer at a shooting park here one of the best marksmen in the State blew up one of the finest guns in this city by a little carelessness. He was cleaning out the barrels and did not take time to pull out a loose piece of flannel which was hanging partially out at the muzzle, when a stray bird flying over his head gave him a chance for a good shot. He killed the bird but he also took out nearly eight inches of the side of his gun.

"In cleaning a gun always take off the barrel and clean from the breech. Powder that burns wet should be used and the gun cleaned before the burned powder bakes on the sides of the barrel. A piece of flannel will remove the dirt. If the powder has baked moisten the flannel with sperm oil, vaseline or cosmoline. After cleansing the barrels thoroughly they should be moistened with oil and then placed in the case, which ought to be kept in dry atmosphere. It is remarkable how effectively moisture will make its way into a gun-barrel. If rust has begun in the barrels it should be cut out with a wire burr or some similar contrivance, and the gun cleaned in the ordinary way. The barrels of a gun should be inspected at least once a month and particles of rust removed on their first appearance. Rust impairs the range of a gun."

"Can a new barrel be substituted for one that is broken in a shotgun?"

"Not without great cost. A majority of guns are made by machinery, and the various parts to fit one another as door-hinges do. To make a broken part for such a gun would be like making a broken part for a hinge. It would be special work and the cost would be extravagance. It would cost $75 or $100 to put a barrel on a gun that originally cost only $25 or $30. When a gun bursts all you can do with it is to throw it away, unless the injury is near the muzzle, where it can be cut out. Barrels are good so long as they are not shorter than twenty-six inches. How are the holes put in shotgun barrels? I might most intelligently say they are wrapped or plaited around cores. The boring of a barrel is merely a process of dressing. I think there is no work of gun better than the American. Unless one is acquainted with the methods of the house that sold his gun he can not tell whether a gun is imported or domestic. For example, there are New York houses that send to England large contracts for guns. The barrels may be made in half a dozen cities of England, and the stamp, besides bearing the name of the man who gave the contract, also bears the name of the city at which the work is done. It is nothing against a gun that it was made in England, and at the same time the only thing in its favor is cheapness. They make guns in England for less money than we do here. The range of a gun depends on several conditions which might be summarized under 'concentration of power.' The longest range guns are constructed to put their force where it will do the bullet most good. The rifling or coiling of a barrel enables the bullet to overcome atmospheric resistance, which increases the distance of its range. Then the powder must be good, and the principles of concentrating power applied to the manufacture of the cartridge. The guns best cared for were those which the pioneers hung on forked sticks over the fire place."—Indianapolis Journal.

Swapping in the West.

"Swapping is always associated with Western life," said a real estate broker. "One always imagines a cowboy or ranchman meeting another and exchanging a horse for a gun, and a blanket or a number of cattle for a piece of land. This barter is not only carried on in the West. You would be surprised to see what queer transactions we have to take sometimes. A lady in this city who had some fine diamonds, wished to make an investment in real estate, but had no money to invest. She came to us and we managed to get a piece of land for which she gave some of her diamonds. The man who disposed of the land did not want the diamonds after he had received them and he again managed to exchange them for a share in a good paying business in a small country town. Sometimes all the stock in a store will be valued and taken for real estate; sometimes horses and carriages will be given for businesses."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

THE TABLES TURNED.

A Well-Laid Plan Which Didn't Work to Every Body's Satisfaction.

"Jes' a minute, if you please," said a man in Western Nebraska as he came out of a house and hailed us as we were going past. "Did you happen to notice the school-house much when you came past it down here a mile?"

"Yes, we saw it."

"School wasn't called yet, I reckon?"

"No."

"Was the boys out havin' a ring-rastle an' whoopin' a good deal like injuns?"

"No, every thing was very quiet."

"School-house broke up any—winders gone or door stove in?"

"Guess not."

"See any thing of the teacher?"

"Yes; saw him through the door sitting with his feet on the desk reading a book."

"Was, hey? Seemed calm?"

"He appeared that way."

"See any thing of a big, raw-boned boy, with long arms an' big hands, wearin' a high felt hat painted red, white 'n' blue?"

"Yes; we noticed him."

"Wa'n't he walkin' 'round talkin' loud, with his thumb under one galius an' a chip on his shoulder?"

"No. He was sitting on the ground near the school-house, with his back against a tree. His nose was all bloody, his arms were hanging down, and he looked sick. His clothes were about half torn off of him, and one of the small boys was carrying his striped hat full of water to him from the creek."

"Well, I sw'ar if that don't beat me! Didn't holler no slang at you or offer to fight you?"

"I don't think he saw us at all—one eye was closed up."

"I expect—nothing s'prises me now! I reckon the plan didn't work."

"What was it?"

"W'y, that feller's my boy, you see, an' he 'lowed to lick the teacher this morain', but I reckon from what you say something went wrong somewhere. The teacher give him a longer 'rithmetic lesson than he orter, an' says I to him, 'Hop onto the little dood an' whale him—jes' show him that you understand what's the matter o' Hanner?' Bill said that he'd do it an' that I'd better see the other two school officers an' git another teacher somewhere, 'cause there wouldn't be enough o' this un left to wad a gun when he got done with him. Says he, 'Pap, don't be scart if you notice small pieces of a school-teacher fallin' 'round here 'long durin' the forenoon!' One eye shut and his nose bloody! An' Bill al'ays claimed he was a fighter, too! I'll be tectotally chawed if he ain't been trottin' in the wrong class for two years. When he gits home if I don't bring out the old strap an' larrup him myself then you can shoot me. A black eye an' nose all bloody! Say, wait till half-past four o'clock an' you'll see a big, lazy, double-fisted fraud of a boy git pounded all to pieces by his old father!"—F. H. Carruth, in Chicago Tribune.

A CANADIAN'S PLAINT.

He Seeks Enlightenment on a Weighty Question of Principle.

An unduly excited young man rushed into the Woodbridge Street Station the other day with something to say, and as soon as he could get his breath he said:

"I came in here on a train from Toronto, and I met a man. Says I is this the United States of America, and says he, you are bloody right it is. Says I I'm glad to know it, and is this town called Detroit? He says you can bet your life 'tis, and won't you come and have a glass of something for the stomach's sake! Says I I don't care if I do, being it is not against the law, and we departed for a place where the flowing bowl doth circulate."

"And you had a drink?"

"We had a drink, and says I I'm much obliged to you, stranger, and he says not at all, and as I was turning to depart he gives me a push and a shove, and grabs off me neck pin and puts it into his pocket."

"What's the value of the pin?"

"I paid twenty cents for it in Toronto."

"And what kind of a complaint do you wish to make?"

"None at all, sir. I'm here to ask you if that is the right principle on the part of the American people? If it is I've nothing more to say. If it isn't I'll return and find the man, and says I: 'Why did you shove and rob me?' 'For fun,' says he. 'That's poor fun,' says I, and with that I gives him two on the nose and three below the belt, and as he lies down for a quiet nap in the gutter I continues my journey to Chicago. Good day, sir; glad to have had the honor of meeting you."—Detroit Free Press.

A Good Darky Story.

In these days of schools and schoolmasters for the colored people the number of those "who can not tell their right hand from their left" will presumably rapidly diminish; but before the "darky" of ante-bellum times quite disappears among the shades of things that are past, here is a story of "Elviry." Elvira fell sick, and her "ole marster" went to inquire as to the state of her health. The room where she lay was in total darkness (light and air are carefully excluded from a sick-room by many negroes), and Mr. B—— stood outside the door while speaking to the invalid. He asked: "Which eye is it, Elvira, that is swollen?" The voice of Elvira replied through the darkness: "Marster, it's dat eye over nex' to de barn."—Harper's Magazine.

ENTRE-ACTE REVERIES.

I.

Between the acts, while the orchestra played
That sweet old waltz with the lilting measure,
I drifted away to a dear dead day,
When the dance for me was the sun of all pleasure.
When my veins were rife with the fever of life,
When hope ran high as an unswept ocean,
And my heart's great gladness was almost madness,
As I floated off to the music's motion.

II.

How little I cared for the world outside,
How little I cared for the dull day after.
The thought of trouble went up like a bubble,
And burst in a sparkle of mirthful laughter.
Oh! and the beat of it, oh, and the sweet of it,
Melody, motion and young blood melted.
The dancers swayed, the players played,
The air song deluged and music pelted.

III.

I knew no weariness, no, not I;
My step was as light as the waving grasses
That flutter with ease on the strong armed breeze
As it waltzes over the wild morasses.
Life was all sound and swing, youth was a perfect thing,
Night was the goddess of satisfaction.
Oh! how I tripped away, down to the edge of day!
Joy lay in motion and rest in action.

IV.

I dance no more on the music's wave,
I yield no more to its bewildering power.
That time has flown like a rose that is blown,
Yet life is a garden forever in flower.
Though storms of tears have watered the years
Between to-day and that day departed,
Though trials have met me and grief's waves wet me,
And I have been tired and trouble hearted.

V.

Though under the sod of a wee green grave
A great sweet hope in darkness perished,
Yet life, to my thinking, is a cup worth drinking,
A gift to be glad of, and loved and cherished.
There is deeper pleasure in the slower measure
That Time's grand orchestra now is giving.
Its mellowed minor is sadder but finer,
And life grows daily more worth the living.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.
